Pong and the servants. The doctor laughed gleefully in my face and told me that it was but the beginning. I tell you, Chase, we can't escape the diabolical scheme he has arranged. The water that comes to us from the springs up there in the hills is to be poisoned by those devils. I heard Rasula giving instructions to one of his lieutenants. He thought I was still unconscious from a blow I received when I tried to interfere in behalf of Lady Agnes, who was being roughly dragged along the mountain road. Day and night a detachment of men are to be employed at the springs, deliberately engaged in the attempt to change the tow of pure water into a slow, subtle, deadly poison, the effects of which will not be immediately fatal, but positively so in the course of a few days. In the end we shall sicken and die as with the scourge. They will call it the plague."

A shudder of horror swept through the crowd. Every one looked into his neighbor's face with a profound inquiring light in his eyes, seeking for the first time evidence of approaching death.

Hollingsworth Chase uttered a short, scornful laugh as he unconcernedly lifted a match to one of his precious cigarettes. The others stared at him in amazement.

"Great God, Chase," groaned Browne "is this a joke?"

"Yes, and it's on Rasula," said the other laconically. "You say that Rasula isn't aware of the fact that you overheard what he said to his man. Then, even now, in spite of your escape, he believes that we may go on drinking the water without in the least suspecting what it has in store for us. Good! That's why I say the joke is on him. Browne, you are a doctor, a chemist. Well, we'll distill and double and triple distill the water. That's all. A schoolboy might have thought of that. It's all right, old man. You're fagged out. Your brain isn't working well. Don't look so crestfallen. Mr. Britt, you and Mr. Saunders will give immediate instructions that no more water is to be drunk or used until Mr. Browne has had a few hours' rest. He can take an alcohol bath, and we can all drink wine. It won't hurt us. At 10 o'clock sharp Dr. Browne will begin operating the distilling apparatus in the laboratory. By Jove, will you listen to the row my clients are making out there in the woods! They seem to be annoyed over something."

Outside the walls the islanders were shouting and calling to each other. Rifles were cracking far and near, voicing in their peculiarly spiteful way the rage that reigned supreme.

As Chase ascended the steps Bobby Browne and his wife came up beside him.

"Chase," said Browne in a low voice, his face turned away to hide the more tiderich that lifted his soul, "you are a man! I want you to know that I thank you from the bottom of my heart."

"Never mind, old man! Say no more," interrupted Chase, suddenly embarrassed.

"I've been a fool, Chase—I don't deserve the friendship of any one—not even that of my wife. It's all over, though. You understand? I'm not a coward. I'll do anything you say, take any risk, to pay for the trouble I've caused you all. Send me out to fight"—

"Nonsense! Your wife needs you, Browne. I dare say that I wouldn't have been above the folly that got the better of you. Only"—he hesitated for a minute—"only it couldn't have happened to me if I had a wife as true and as good and as pretty as the one you have."

Browne was silent for a long time, his arm still about Drusilla's shoulder. At the end of the long hall he said with decision in his voice:

"Chase, you may tell your clients that, so far as I am concerned, they may have the beastly island and everything that goes with it. I'm through with it all. I shall discharge Britt and"—

"My dear boy, it's most magnanimous of you!" cried Chase merrily. "But I'm afraid you can't decide the question in such an offhand manner. Take good care of him, Mrs. Browne. Don't let him talk."

She held out her hand to him impulsively. As he gallantly lifted the cold fingers to his lips she said, without taking her almost hungry gaze from his face: "Thank you, Mr. Chase. I shall never forget you."

He stood there looking after them as they went up the stairway, a puzzled expression in his face.

"I guess he'll be a good boy from now on." But he wondered what it was that he had seen or felt in her somber gaze.

In fifteen minutes he was sound asleep in his room, his long frame relaxed, his hands wide open in utter fatigue. He dreamed of a Henner girl with Geneyra's brilliant face instead of the vague, greenish features that haunt the vision with their subtle mysticism.

He was awakened at noon by Selim who obeyed his instructions to the minute. The eager Arab rubbed the soreness and stiffness out of his master's body with copious applications of alcohol.

"I'm sorry you awoke me, Selim," said the master enigmatically. Selim drew back, dismayed. "You drove her away." Selim's eyes blinked with bewilderment. "I'm afraid she'll never come back."

"Excellency?" trembled on the lips of the mystified servant.

"Ah, me!" sighed the master resignedly. "She smiled so divinely. Henner girls never smile, do they, Selim? Have you noticed that they are always pensive? Perhaps you haven't. It doesn't matter. But this one smiled I say," coming back to earth, "have they begun to distill the water? I've got a frightful thirst."

"Yes, excellency. The Sahib Browne is at work. One of the servants became sick today. Now no one is drinking the water. Bahlo is refrigerating ice from the storehouses and melting it, but the supply is not large. Excellency, you will take Selim to live with you in Paris?" he said after awhile wistfully. "I will be your slave."

"Paris? Who the dickens said anything about Paris?" demanded Chase, startled.

"Neenah says you will go there to live, sahib. Does not the most glorious princess live in Paris?"

"Selim, you've been listening to gossip. It's a frightful habit to get into. Put cotton in your ears. But if I were to take you, what would become of little Neenah?"

"Oh, Neenah?" said Selim easily. "If she would be a trouble to you, excellency, I can sell her to a man I know."

Chase looked blackly at the eager Arab, who quailed.

"You miserable dog!"

Selim gasped. "Excellency!"

"Don't you love her?"

"Yes, yes, sahib—yes! But if she would be a trouble to you—no!" protested the Arab anxiously. Chase laughed as he came to appreciate the sacrifice his servant would make for him.

"I'll take you with me, Selim, wherever I go—and if I go—but, my lad, we'll take Neenah along, too, to save trouble. She's not for sale, my good Selim." The husband of Neenah radiated joy.

"Then she may yet be the slave of the most glorious princess! Allah is great! The most glorious one has asked her if she will not come with her."

"Selim," commanded the master ominously, "don't repeat the gossip you pick up when I'm not around."

CHAPTER XXX.

THE TWO WORLDS.

TWO days and nights crept slowly into the past, and now the white people of the chateau had come to the eve of their last day's stay on the island of Japat. The probationary period would expire with the sun on the following day, the anniversary of the death of Taswell Skaggs. The six months set aside by the testator as sufficient for all the requirements of Cupid were to come to an inglorious end at 7 o'clock on March 29. According to the will, if Agnes Ruthven and Robert Browne were not married to each other before the close of that day all of their rights in the estate were lost to them.

Tomorrow would be the last day of residence required. But, alack, was it to be the last that they were to spend in the world forsaken land?

No later than that morning a steamer—a small Dutch freighter—had come to a stop off the harbor, but it turned tail and fled within an hour. No one came ashore. The malevolent influence

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY

Read at Meeting of Board of Commerce

AT MEETING HELD JANUARY 4, 1910

Covers the Work of the Past Two Years

Meeting Will be Held January 17 to Pass on Proposed Amendments to By-Laws—Report of Treasurer.

To the Stockholders of the Charlevoix Board of Commerce:

I present herewith my report as secretary, covering the period from December 9, 1907 up to the present time. The fact that this report covers a period of two years, is due to the failure to hold an annual meeting last December. Though due notice was given of such meeting, a quorum did not appear at the specified time, nor at the adjourned dates; as the Board of Directors were in the midst of negotiations with the Great Lakes Portland Cement Company and expected to close the deal at any day, no urgent attempt was made to hold the adjourned annual meeting hoping to close the transaction and report in full regarding it, at the annual meeting when held. But delay followed delay until the spring and summer were here, and at that late date, it was thought best to let the meeting go over until this time. This much is said, not to excuse the failure to have the meeting but that you may know the reasons therefor; first your own failure to attend, secondly, the hope to give you important information when it was held.

Pres. F. E. Turrell, having resigned his office when he left the city, Vice-President Harry Nicholls was chosen by the director to fill the vacancy, and S. A. Martin was elected vice-president.

While the Board of Directors have not accomplished as much as they hoped to report to you, still, looking back over the time, and we find that it is not entirely barren of results.

Realizing that we must look to our stone deposits for the greatest field for manufacturing endeavor, the board has devoted much of its energy and your money, along that line, for we know that the securing of a cement plant meant also the extension of the Michigan Central railroad to our city. You are all now well aware of the efforts to secure the location of the plant of the Great Lakes Portland Cement Company, on the lands near town. When after overcoming one obstacle after another, and victory seemed certain to crown our efforts, failure ensued. But the failure was not on the part of this board, nor on the part of our citizens, who so generously backed up the board in all our requests; and the city council also did their full share. Not disheartened by this failure, the board have been actively engaged in attempts to interest other parties in the erection of a cement factory in Charlevoix, and while negotiations with this second concern were still going forward, a third proposition was also being considered; and I am glad to report at this time, that the board is negotiating with the Standard Lime and Cement Company, and that as far as we can judge, the outlook is very bright for the consummation of all our hopes, in the erection of a fifteen hundred barrel plant here during the coming year.

The National Boy City was brought to Charlevoix through the efforts of the board, aided by the hearty co-operation of our representative citizens; and while the first season may not appear to some, to have been a very great success, we believe that the future development of this great idea will fully justify the hopes of its founders, and result in great material benefit to our city. The Boy City Association have recently purchased the land where the city is located, and this proves the faith that the backers of the enterprise have in its future growth and development.

The West Michigan Development Association has also been aided financially and morally by this board, and some of our public-spirited citizens, and the recent exposition held in Chicago, at which the display of fruits and other products from North and West Michigan eclipse the display from the much-boasted irrigated farms of the west, has given our section of the state more advertising, and will result in greater development of our farm lands, than anything ever before done for our agricultural interests. A display is also being planned for the state grange meeting in Traverse City, the present month.

But it is unnecessary to go into further details; sufficient has been said to show the desirability, if not the necessity, of our city continuing its support of either this or some other similar organization. And it is unfortunately true that the Board of Commerce has not had the support of many, who pledged their financial backing when they subscribed to its stock.

The supplement report attached hereto will show just who are paying, and who are not paying, toward the support of this organization. Some of those in arrears keep promising to pay up soon, others have refused to pay and say they do not intend to pay any more assessments.

Believing that justice to those who were paying in good faith demanded it, I introduced a resolution in the board of directors instructing the president to employ an attorney and start suit for collection against some who were perfectly able to pay, and collectable, in order that we might know just "where we are at," and the result of the suit will, in my opinion, decide whether this organization is to stand, or fall.

FINANCES

Since my last report the secretary has received the sum of $1,849, all of which was turned over to the treasurer promptly, from time to time as collected, and I hold his receipts therefor.

During this time, orders have been issued, on bills ordered paid by the directors, footing $1232.61. A few of these orders are outstanding not having been presented for payment, so that this sum will not agree exactly with the amount of orders reported as paid, by the treasurer. The expenditures during the two years, were divided in the following manner:

For taxes, and cutting weeds	$ 84.13
Printing	21.50
Banquets and cigars for supervisors	29.00
Toward the Boy City	401.44
Advertising	10.00
Railroad promotion, right-of way, etc	20.00
Pushing cement plant project	151.41
Contributed to good roads near cemetery	189.00
W. M. D. A. membership, and expenses in connection with Chicago exhibit	67.90
Salaries, and general expenses, such as telephone telegram, postage, livery, commissions etc	258.20
Total expenditures during two years	$1232.61

It is only fair to state that nearly one hundred dollars of the bills paid, were incurred previous to the election of the present board of directors.

In addition to the sum named above as paid toward the West Michigan Development Association, private parties contributed quite a sum to the project, through the Charlevoix member of the Bureau. D. S. Payton, and I understand that Mr. Payton wishes to make report thereon at this meeting.

At the time of the last annual meeting, there was in the treasurer's hand according to his report to the stockholders, the sum of $29.45. During the two years I have paid to him $1,849 a total in the treasury of $1,878.45. When all orders authorized by the board of directors are paid, there will therefore remain in the treasury the sum of $645.84.

In closing I desire to say, that while the present officers and directors have doubtless made mistakes, as who does not, from my service as secretary of the board, I know that the directors have worked hard and earnestly and conscientiously for the upbuilding of our city and county; and I bespeak for their successors in office, the hearty and sincere co-operation which alone can bring success in this, or any other organization.

All of which is most respectfully submitted.

WILL E. HAMPTON, Secretary.

PENNY NUISANCE

Government Calls Special Attention to This

Rural Patrons Urged to Keep Stamps on Hand.

The following communication from Fourth Assistant Postmaster General DeGraw—in reference to the placing of pennies in rural boxes the trouble caused throughout the country by the custom. When carriers are required, especially in severely cold weather, to take off their gloves and fish out the pennies from the box, it greatly hinders the delivery and collection of the mails besides subjecting the carriers to unnecessary inconvenience, all of which can be avoided if the rural patrons will kindly provide themselves with a few stamps and keep a supply constantly on hand.

The following communication was recently sent to all postmasters in the United States having rural routes with a request that it be published.

December 10, 1909.

"SIR:—From a recent count made by rural carriers in one of the counties in the state of New York of coins deposited by patrons in their boxes for the purchase of stamp supplies, it was found that each carrier in the county was collecting an average of 115 one cent coins each week. This average applied to all the routes in operation throughout the country would give the enormous total of about 300,000,000 one cent coins.

"As most of the coins are deposited loose in boxes, it is desirable that you and the rural carriers, in a tactful and polite way, put forth your best efforts to induce patrons to provide themselves with stamp supplies in advance of their needs, and to equip their boxes with suitable coin-holding receptables. It should be explained to patrons that the picking of loose coins from boxes not only resulted in needless hardship and suffering to carriers, in winter weather, delays the delivery and collection of the mails, but frequently results in actual money loss to the carriers, for if, in collecting coins from boxes, they drop into the snow or on the ground without recovery, they are required to replace the amount out of their own funds."

Respectfully,
P. D. DEGRAW
Fourth Assistant Postmaster Gen.

FIRE AT BELLAIRE

Destroyed Light Plant Early Tuesday Morning

Loss About Thirty-five Hundred Insurance One Thousand.

The lighting plant of the village of Bellaire was discovered to be on fire at about 4:30 Tuesday morning and burned to the ground. The loss is about $3,500, with $1,000 insurance.

Superintendent Charles J. Evans had gone into the rear room to oil up, and on his return to the office found a blaze in the ceiling near the main part. He attempted to put it out and was helped finally by the driver of a logging team, who came along. He thought the fire was about out, but on going into the rear room found that the blaze had run along under the roof and that the plant was beyond help.

The village plant was about eight years old, and after the first year had given all-night service. The plant was located just a mile from Main street, and was run by water power. The contract for a new power house and flume, to be of concrete, was let last summer but was not completed before late spring.

Just what will be done about lights has not of course been decided. The council may make arrangements to connect the village lighting mains with the plant of the Hydraulic Light & Power company, which supplies Charlevoix from Bellaire, or the new dynamos brought to place in the new power house may perhaps be placed near some mill and run by steam till spring.

MRS. HULME DEAD

Had Been Resident of Charlevoix for Over Twenty Years

Leaves Four Children—Funeral Held Monday at Baptist Church

Mrs. Esther Ann Mayall Hulme was born at Ashton under Lyne, Lancashire, England on April 6, 1834. On November 24, 1864 she was married to William Hulme and came to America. The following year they settled on a new farm in Leelanau county, Michigan and there for several years underwent all the privations and hardships of early pioneer life. There their six children were all born, two of whom died in infancy. During these years the husband was away sailing much of the time and consequently and the responsibility of care of the family rested largely, with the devoted and faithful mother. In 1887 the family moved to Charlevoix and here Mrs. Hulme has resided ever since. March 16, 1907, Mr. Hulme departed this life after a lingering illness of paralysis. Mrs. Hulme was a cheerful and devoted mother, a kind, sympathetic and helpful neighbor, an earnest, conscientious and trustful Christian, being a worthy member of Charlevoix Baptist church for about twenty-two years. Christmas Day she, with other friends, went to spend the day at her daughter's, Mrs. Beattie. That night she took to her bed and was not out again.

Thursday night, January 6th she passed suddenly and peaceably away without even a struggle. Only a few hours before she spoke so confidently to her pastor of her unfaltering faith in the Savior and of the Bright Hope beyond.

Besides a large circle of friends and acquaintances she leaves to mourn her loss, two sons, William Hulme, Jr., Herbert Hulme and two daughters, Mrs. Arthur Beattie, and Mrs. Morris Chew, fifteen grandchildren and two great grandchildren.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. F. Dewey Ehle of the Baptist church from the residence Monday, January 10, at ten o'clock a. m. Interment beside her husband in Brookside cemetery.

F. J. BAILEY DEAD

Suddenly Called Hence at Mobile, Alabama Friday

For the Past Three Years had been Manager of the Charlevoix Inn.

Word was received in this city Sunday morning that Fred J. Bailey, manager of the Charlevoix Inn, had dropped dead in Mobile, Alabama, Friday night.

Mr. Bailey and wife left Boston Tuesday for Mobile, where they expected to spend the winter and had just arrived in Mobile, when he was suddenly called.

Mr. Bailey had been manager of the Inn for the past three years and was well known as one of the most successful hotel managers in the United States. Since coming to Charlevoix he has taken a great interest in the welfare of the city and gained the strong friendship of all with whom he did business.

He was one of the leaders in the Christian Science society of this city and a member of Charlevoix Masonic lodge.

The funeral was held in Chicago Sunday.

NEW DEPARTURE

One Week Courses at Michigan Agriculture College.

A beautiful calendar, issued by the Michigan Agricultural College, has been received at this office. It gives a number of pictures of buildings, campus scenes, laboratories, etc. To those who have known the college for many years, it brings vividly to mind the great progress made by this institution in recent years.

The latest departure is to offer busy farmers courses one week in length. This year during the week beginning February 14th, will be given instruction in corn and other farm crops. Every man who grows corn can receive one week of the most thorough and practical instruction. The following week, which was formerly the week of the round-up institute, will be devoted to fruit culture, soils, crops, fertilizers, etc. The week beginning February 28th, will be turned over to the dairymen of the state. This will be a great week for the men interested in this branch of farming. The next and last of the one-week courses will be devoted to those who are interested in swine. Speakers from abroad will assist in making these four weeks the greatest opportunity ever offered the farmers of Michigan. One may remain for one week or the four weeks, just as he chooses. Every farmer who has a desire to improve his farm and its earning capacity, should not let slip by, this great opportunity.

HOMES FOR POULTRY.

The Open Front Type That Gives Ventilation Now Popular.

A few years ago the open front poultry house was practically unknown. The tendency at that time was to construct houses that were very tight and ventilated by the opening of windows and in many instances by means of flues and cupolas. This type of house, as a rule, was more or less damp, and it did not take many years for progressive men to realize that damp houses meant cold houses and an abundance of disease. The result has been a gradual increase of the amount of fresh air in the house and less attention given to warmth until today we have what is known as the open or cloth front house. One can still find, however, many types of poultry houses, but the open front house is fast becoming the standard for every climate.

The beneficial effects of a dry house, with an abundance of fresh air, has been very forcibly demonstrated by several experiment stations. Professor

OPEN FRONT POULTRY HOUSE.

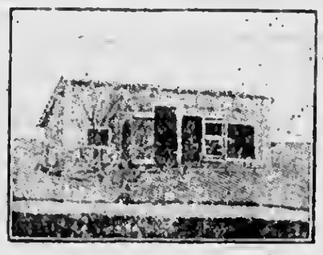
Graham of the Kansas Agricultural college states that after careful tests made with warmed buildings, with double wall houses having curtains before the perches and six feet away next to the wire netting, he has found that the one ply board houses with netted fronts have given better results both as to the number of eggs produced in winter and the fertility and vigor of germs.

The open front house can be modified to meet a wide range of climate. In the northern states the house is generally equipped with a curtain front and hooded roost. These curtains are dropped at night to insure a warmer house while the fowls are inactive.

The open front shed roof house shown in the cut is a type of the continuous house. It is 108 feet long, 20 feet wide, 9 feet high in front and 6 feet in the rear. It is divided into five pens 20 by 20 feet, with solid board partitions between each pen. One bird is allowed to every four square feet of space.

The roost is provided with a cloth curtain, which is dropped on very cold nights. Two small holes with sliding doors are used to ventilate the roost when the curtain is down. The floor consists of a layer of sheathing, then a layer of building paper and flooring. The outside of the studs on the ends and back is first covered with a layer of sheathing, then a layer of building paper and novelty siding. The inside of the studs, with the exception of the hooded roost, is entirely open. The nests are placed on the end walls and partitions. The entire building rests on brick piers about two feet from the ground, and each pen is equipped with a trapdoor, which allows the hen to go down and wallow in the dirt under the house.

In many farms where poultry is carried on as an adjunct to the other farm crops is found a variety of small stationary houses. There are several advantages in favor of the small stationary house. Where land is restricted it is possible to provide a system of cultivation where the houses are small and set far enough apart to permit of double yards. These yards can be cropped alternately and thus do away with the danger of tainted soil.



A STATIONARY SCRATCHING SHED HOUSE.

In many instances very hilly land that will not permit the construction of long houses can be utilized to good advantage with the small stationary house such as is shown in the cut under the caption, "A Stationary Scratching Shed House."

COMPARISONS OF CLIMATE.

Some In Both Hemispheres Are Quite Similar.

When two regions on different hemispheres possess similar climates there is nearly always a similarity in their native vegetation, and it is a demonstrated fact that many of the plants native to one of the regions find themselves perfectly at home in the other. California conditions are markedly similar to those of the Mediterranean region, so that it is no surprise to find more than fifty plants from the latter region that thrive in California with marvelous vigor. It is conservatively estimated that over 75 per cent of the forage on the California range lands is made up of Mediterranean immigrants, mostly annuals, such as wild oats, bur clover, alfilerilla, brome grasses, fescues, wild barleys and many others.

The Great basin and the Columbia basin resemble California in one marked respect—namely, that the summers are dry and the winters wet. Indeed, the principal difference from California lies in the colder winters. The difference has not prevented the introduction and rapid spread of most of the European annuals now so conspicuous in California. It is really little short of amazing how rapidly and extensively some of these plants have occupied the range lands at the expense of the native vegetation.

The conditions in Arizona are not very favorable to the plants that have found California conditions so congenial, with the exception of alfilerilla Arabia of all old world regions is most like Arizona, and from there, if anywhere, we should expect plants adapted to Arizona conditions.

Western Washington and western Oregon closely approximate in climate the British Isles, and practically everything that thrives in the one region is at home in the other.

The middle and south Atlantic states are similar to Japan and China in climate. It has long been recognized that all Japanese plants, especially ornamentals thrive in this region perfectly. A number of them are so at home, indeed, that they have literally taken to the woods and behave as natives. Witness the Japanese honeysuckle, Japan clover, ailanthus, pawlownia and the recently introduced Chinese violet.

The cotton states evidently have much in common with India and southeastern Asia, whence we have obtained cowpeas, crab grass, Bermuda grass, velvet beans and many weeds, and to a less degree with Argentina where rescue grass, carpet grass, paspalum grass and a number of common southern weeds are native.

Of late years there has been increasing evidence that the high plains of northern Texas resemble the highlands of India. At least practically every plant introduced from the India highlands has succeeded better in the Texas Panhandle than elsewhere in the United States.

The great plains region lying east of the Rocky mountains and west of the one hundredth meridian finds its nearest parallel in climate in Asia. This is the region that gave us alfalfa.

Homemade Horsepower Pump.

The accompanying sketch shows a novel horsepower pump which is used on a northwestern ranch. This pump consists of a walking beam twenty to twenty-five feet long, which is connected at one end to the pump rod and at the other end to the shaft of an old mower wheel. This shaft is lengthened out to about twelve feet and bent into the shape of a crank near the end opposite the wheel. The bearings for this crank are made from a piece of bar iron, V shaped, with a flat bottom. This iron is bolted down loosely to a piece of timber fitted into the ground.

The horse is hitched on near the wheel. The V shaped bearing turns as the horse walks around in a circle, and the crank makes a double stroke for every revolution of the mower wheel. Where a well is deep two mower wheels may be put together to add tractive weight. A horse soon learns to operate this pump without a driver.

The Bug Nuisance.

Dr. H. T. Fernald of the Massachusetts Agricultural college says that five-sixths of all the living creatures of the globe are insects and that not more than one out of ten is friendly to man. He estimates that $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 worth of damage is annually wrought by insects and that known means of protection, properly used, could prevent two-thirds of this loss. He is therefore impressing the necessity of a close study by all classes of people of this question with the hope of saving forest and staple trees and crops.

How to Exterminate Fleas.

The following directions are given to those who are annoyed by fleas: Insect powder used freely in the house and about the outbuildings is recommended by one who tried it. For all outdoor buildings use air slaked lime. Scatter the lime about freely.

A surer way is first to clean all the loose rubbish out and burn, then take one quart of crude carbolic acid, four gallons of water and a spray pump and spray house and burn two or three times and you will get rid of them.

Usefulness of the Hen.

The period of a hen's usefulness depends altogether on the hen. While the first year is usually the best for egg production, it is not always the case, some hens laying better the second year. But, as a rule, one will get the greatest number of eggs from a given number of fowls by having the pullets hatched early.

The meat of yarded poultry is always more tender than that of fowls having free range, due to the extreme muscular development of the latter.

It is said that there are more than 2,000,000 goats in this country, and all are practically free from tuberculosis. Thousands of them are milk goats and are used exclusively for this purpose.

Boiling Milk.

A pinch of soda stirred into milk that is to be boiled will keep it from curdling.

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright, 1908, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

CHAPTER XXXI—Continued.

In silence he clasped her hand and led her unresisting through the window and out upon the broad gallery. She was returning the fervid pressure of his fingers, warm and electric. They pressed slowly to the rail. Two chairs stood close together. They sat down side by side. The power of speech seemed to have left them altogether.

He laid the two cigarettes on the broad stone rail. She followed the movement with perturbed eyes and then leaned forward and placed her elbows on the rail.

"If the ship should come tomorrow you would go out of my life—you would leave me here," he began hoarsely.

"No, no!" cried, turning upon him suddenly. could not stay here. You shall! I

"But, dear love, I am bound to stay. I want go. And, God help me, I would If I could go into your world you unto myself for ever—will tell me now that some day you will forget your world and all within it—mine—then, ah, then, it will be different! But without you the hope of abiding peace anywhere."

She put hands over her eyes.

"I cannot bear the thought of—of leaving you behind—of leaving you here to die at the hands of those beasts down there. Hollingsworth, I implore you—come! If the opportunity comes—and it will, I know—you will leave the island with the rest of us?"

"Not unless I am commanded to do so by the man who sent me here to serve these beasts, as you call them."

He leaned over and took her hand in his. "You do love me?"

"You know I do—yes, yes!" she cried from her heart, keeping her face resolutely turned away from him. "I am sick with love for you. Why should I decoy the thing that speaks so loudly for itself—to my heart! Listen! Can you not hear it beating? It is hurting me—yes, it is hurting me!"

He trembled at this exhibition of released, unchecked passion, and yet he did not clasp her to his arms.

"Will you come into my world, Genevra?" he whispered. "All my life would be given up in guarding the love you would give to me—all my life given to making you love me more and more, until there will be no other world for us to think of."

"I wish that I had not been born," she sobbed. "I cannot, dearest—I cannot change the laws of fate. I am fated—I am doomed to live forever in the dreary world of my fathers. But how can I give you up? How can I give up your love? How can I cast you out of my life?"

"You do not love Prince Karl?"

"How can you ask?" she cried fiercely. "Am I not loving you with all my heart and soul?"

"And you would leave me behind if the ship should come?" he persisted, with cruel insistence. "You will go back and marry that—him? Loving me, you will marry him?" Her head dropped upon her arm. He turned cold as death. "God help and God pity you, my love. I never knew before what your little world means to you. I give you up to it. I crawl back into the one you look down upon with scorn. I shall not again ask you to descend to the world where love is."

Her hand lay limp in his. They stared blankly out into the night, and no word was spoken.

The minutes became an hour, and yet they sat there with set faces, bursting hearts, unseeing eyes.

Below them in the shadows Bobby Browne was pacing the embankment, his wife drawn close to his side. Three men, Britt, Saunders and Bowles, were smoking their pipes on the edge of the terrace. Their words came up to the two in the gallery.

"If I have to die tomorrow," Saunders, the bridegroom, was saying, with real feeling in his voice, "I should say with all my heart that my life has been less than a week long. The rest of it was nothing. I never was happy before, and happiness is everything."

CHAPTER XXXI.

THE SHIPS THAT PASS.

THE next morning was rainy. A quick, violent storm had rushed up from the sea during the night.

Chase, after a sleepless night, came down and, without waiting for his breakfast, hurried out upon the gallery overlooking the harbor. Genevra was there before him, pale, wistful, heavy eyed, standing in the shelter of a huge pilaster.

"Hollingsworth," she said drearily, "do you believe he will come today?"

"He?" he asked, puzzled.

"My uncle. The yacht was to call for me not later than today."

"I remember," he said slowly. "It may come, Genevra. The day is young."

She clasped his hand convulsively, a desperate revolt in her soul.

"I almost hope that it may not come for me!" she said, her voice shaking with suppressed emotion. "It will not come. I feel it in my heart. We shall die here together, Hollingsworth. Ah, in that way I may escape the other life. No, no! What am I saying? Of course I want to leave this dreadful island this dreadful, beautiful, hateful, happy island. Am I not too silly?" She was speaking rapidly, almost hysterically, a nervous, flickering smile on her face.

"Dear one," he said gently, "the yacht will come. If it should not come today my cruisers will forestall its mission. As sure as there is a sea those cruisers will come." She looked into his eyes intently, as if afraid of something there. "Oh, I'm not mad!" he laughed. "You brought a cruiser to me one day. I'll bring one to you in return. We'll be quits."

"Quits?" she murmured, hurt by the word.

"Forgive me," he said, humbled.

"Hollingsworth," she said after a long, tense scrutiny of the sea, "how long will you remain on this island?"

"Perhaps until I die. If death should come soon. If not, then God knows how long."

"Listen to me," she said intensely. "For my sake you will not stay long. You will come away before they kill you. You will! Promise me. You will come—to Paris? Some day, dear heart? Promise!"

"To Paris?" he said, shaking his head sadly. "No, dearest one. Not now. Listen: I have in my bag upstairs an offer from a great American corporation. My headquarters would be in Paris. My duties would begin as soon as my contract with Sir John Brodney expires. The position is a lucrative one; it presents unlimited opportunities. I am a comparatively poor man. The letter was forwarded to me by Sir John. I have a year in which to decide."

"And you—you will decline?" she asked.

"Yes. I shall go back to America, where there are no princesses of royal blood. Paris is no place for the disappointed, cast-off lover. I can't go there. I love you too madly. I'd go on loving you, and you, good as you are, would go on loving me. There is no telling what would come of it. It will be hard for me to stay away from Paris, desperately hard. Sometimes I feel that I will not be strong enough to do it, Genevra."

"But Paris is huge, Hollingsworth," she argued insistently, an eager, impelling light in her eyes. "We would be as far apart as if the ocean were between us."

"Ah, but would we?" he demanded. "It is almost unheard of for an American to gain entree to our—to the set in which—well, you understand," she said, blushing painfully in the consciousness that she was touching his pride. He smiled sadly.

"My dear, you will do me the honor to remember that I am not trying to get into your set. I am trying to induce you to come into mine. You won't be tempted, so that's the end of it. Beastly day, isn't it?" He uttered the trite commonplace as if no other thought than that of the weather had been in his mind. "By the way," he resumed, with a most genial smile, "for some queer, unreasonable reason I took it into my head last night to worry about the bride's trousseau. How are you going to manage it if you are unable to leave the island until—well, say June?"

She returned his smile with one as sweetly detached as his had been, cackling his spirit. "So good of you to worry," she said, a defiant red in her cheeks. "You forget that I have a post-nuptial trousseau at home. A few stitches here and there, an alteration or two, some smart summer gowns and hats—Oh, it will be so simple! What is it? What do you see?"

He was looking eagerly, intently toward the long, low headland beyond the town of Arattat.

"The smoke! See? Close inshore too!" By heaven, Genevra, there's a steamer off there. She's a small one or she wouldn't run in so close. It—it may be the yacht! Wait! We'll soon see. She'll pass the point in a few minutes."

Already the citizens of the town were rushing to the pier. Even before the vessel turned the point the watchers at the chateau witnessed a most amazing performance on the dock. Half a hundred natives dropped down as if stricken, scattering themselves along the narrow pier.

The people were simulating death! They were posing as the victims of the plague that infested the land! As he was explaining the ruse to his mystified companion the nose of the vessel came out from behind the tree covered point.

An instant later they were sending wild cries of joy through the chateau, and people were rushing toward them from all quarters.

The trim white thing that glided across the harbor, graceful as a bird, was the marquis' yacht!

It is needless to describe the joyous gale that swept the chateau into a maelstrom of emotions.

They saw the tug put out to meet the small boat; they witnessed the same old maneuvers; they sustained a chill of surprise and despair when the bright white and blue boat from the yacht came to a stop at the command from the tug.

There was an hour of parleying. The beleaguered ones signaled with despairing energy. The flag, limp in the damp air above the chateau, shot up and down in pitiful eagerness.

But the small boat edged away from close proximity to the tug and the nearby dock. They spoke each other at long and ever widening range. At last the yacht's boat turned and fled toward the trim white hull.

Almost before the startled, dazed people on the balcony could grasp the full and horrible truth the yacht had lifted anchor and was slowly headed out to sea.

Chase looked grimly about him into the questioning, stricken faces of his companions. He drew his hand across his moist forehead.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said seriously and without the faintest intent to jest, "we are supposed to be dead!"

There was a single shriek from the bride of Thomas Saunders. No sound left the dry lips of the other watchers, who stood as if petrified and kept their eyes glued upon the disappearing yacht.

"They have left me here to die!" came from the stiffened lips of the Princess Genevra. "They have deserted me! God in heaven!"

"Look!" cried Chase, pointing to the dock. Half a dozen glasses were turned in that direction.

The dying and the dead were leaping about in the wildest exhibition of gleeful triumph.

The yacht slipped into the unreachable horizon, the feathery cloud from its stack lying over against the leaden sky, shaped like a finger that pointed mockingly the way to safety.

White faced and despairing, the watchers turned away and dragged themselves into the splendid halls of the building they had now come to regard as their tomb.

All day long the islanders rejoiced. Their shouts could be plainly heard by the besieged. Their rifles cracked sarcastic greetings from the forest. Bullets whistled gay accompaniments to the ceaseless song: "Allah is great! Allah is good!"

No man in the despised house of Paswell Skaggs slept that night. The guard was doubled at all points open to attack. At 2 in the morning Deppingham, Browne and Chase came up from the walls for coffee and an hour's rest. They were wet and cold. They had heard Rasula's minions shouting derisively all night long: "Where is the warship? Where is the warship?"

"It will come. I am positive," said Chase, insistent in spite of his dejection. They drank their coffee in silence. He knew that the others, including the native who served them, were regarding him with the pity that one extends to the vainglorious braggart who goes down with flying colors.

He went out upon the west gallery and, utterly fagged, threw himself into an unexpected hollow of hard stone in the balustrade.

A shout arose to his lips, but he lacked the power to give it voice.

tired eyes into the inscrutable night that hid the sea from view—the faithless, mocking, jeering sea!

When he aroused himself with a start the gray, drizzly dawn was upon him. He had slept.

The next instant he was on his feet, clutching the stone balustrade with a grip of iron, his eyes starting from his head. A shout arose to his lips, but he lacked the power to give it voice. A quaint smile grew in his face. His eyes were bright and full of triumph. After a full minute of preparation he made his way toward the breakfast room outwardly as calm as a May morning.

Browne and Deppingham were asleep in the chairs. He shook them vigorously. As they awoke he said in the coolest, most matter of fact way:

"There's an American cruiser outside the harbor. Get up!"

CHAPTER XXXII

IN THE SAME GRAVE WITH SKAGGS.

DOWN in the village of Arattat there were signs of a vast commotion. Early risers and the guards were flying from house to house, shouting the news.

Outside the harbor lay the low, savage looking ship. Its guns were pointed directly at the helpless town. Its decks were swarming with white clothed men.

The plague was forgotten. The strategy that had driven off the ships of peace was lost in the face of this ugly creature of war. Rasula's reign of strategy was ended.

"They will not fire! They dare not!" he was shrieking as he dashed back and forth along the dock. "It is chance! They do not come for Chase! Believe in me! The tug! The tug! They must not land!"

The crash of the long unused six pounder at the chateau, followed almost immediately by a great roar from one of the cruiser's guns, brought the panic to a crisis.

The islanders scattered like chaff before the wind, looking wild eyed over their shoulders in dread of the pursuing cannon ball, dodging in and out among the houses and off into the foothills.

Rasula, undaunted, but crazed with disappointment, stuck to his colors on the deserted dock. He cursed and raved and begged. In time two or three of the more canny, realizing that safety lay in an early peace offering, ventured out beside him. Others followed their example, and still others slunk trembling to the fore, their voices ready to protest innocence and friendship and loyalty.

They had heard of the merciless American gunner, and they knew in their souls that he could shoot the island into atoms before nightfall.

The native lawyer harangued them and cursed them and at last brought them to understand in a feeble way

Alcohol and Tobacco and Their Effects on the Body and Mind.

Alcohol is a narcotic poison, because it deadens and paralyzes the nerves. The effects it has on the body as a whole is that it weakens the body. Take for instance a man that drinks is more liable to have sickness and diseases than a man that does not.

Most persons who are in the habit of using alcoholic beverages seem to be especially liable to colds and bronchial affections. The circulation in this person is poor, and the hearts action is affected and there is too much blood in the lung tissue. In some cases late hours and bad habits of life increase the effects ja-t stated.

There are some effects on the circulatory system. Alcohol tends to benumb or partially paralyze the nerves that keep the heart in check. As a result the heart beats faster and the muscles of the heart become thickened and the cavities enlarged. The heart is not in reposg long enough to have it overworked tissues fully nurished and so a process of degeneration begins. Particles of fat or oil take the place of muscle. At first this change is slight; but gradually a change occurs until much of the worn out muscle disappears and fatty tissue takes its place. The heart becomes very weak, hardly able to force the blood through its proper channels. The circulation is poor extremities are swollen and it is hard to breath. Physicians call this disease "fatty degeneration of the heart." The heart gets so weak that it cannot do the work it is required to do and death occurs. It is caused by alcoholic beverages and is called "whiskey heart or the beer drinkers-heart." Alcohol never imparts life giving power while it often causes death.

The changes already mentioned, as have occured in the muscular tissues of the heart may also take shape in the tissue of the arteries. The cells become weakened by the deposit of fat in them, and thus the whole wall loses some of its strength. This makes the walls more liable to rupture and is one of the predisposing causes of apoplexy. The walls of the smaller arteries consist largely of muscular tissue. This tissue is under the control of the vaso-motor nerves. The effect of alcohol is to partially paralyze these vaso motor nerves, so that they cease their full power on the muscular tissue. The reddened face and distended capillaries often seen in a moderate drinker, are indications of the paralysis of the vaso-motor nerves. But the person does not realize that the alcohol is the cause of all the aches and pains he feels, or cares too much for it to give it up, and thus he continues his downward course. We insist that the man who is under the influence of this powerful poison is a sick man, no matter whether he be intoxicated or simply indulges in moderate doses. In either case his system is affected and he should be under the physicians care. Such men need medical advice, the burning of the stomach, headache and darting neuralgic pains, all these and many others indicate the tremendous damaging power of the poison. To attempt to stop gradually is a very poor plan; the best way is to resolve to drop it entirely. But how can all this be prevented? How can we all escape the strong power of alcohol? Answer is by simply refusing to take the first glass of any kind of alcoholic beverages.

After death there will be found more alcohol in the brain and spinal cord than in any other tissue. Alcohol has the strongest affinity for the nervous tissue. Therefore we are correct in stating that alcohol paralyzes nerve tissues; for it completely or partially abolishes the functions of the nervous system. It makes itself appear to be a good advantage before those who do not know its full effects, because of its first power to excite the brain. We understand the cause of the excitement, when we know that alcohol paralyzes, and so checks the action of the vaso-motor center, causing the latter to release its hold over the muscular walls of the small arteries.

A result is the vessels expand and more blood flows through them and this enlargement of these smaller blood vessels, the distending pressure is removed, and the heart beats faster. The more rapid flow of blood and enlarge blood vessels, bring an extra supply of blood to the brain, and thereby it becomes greatly excited. By alcohols direct effect is understood the effect by actual contact of the alcohol with the nerve tissues; for some of the alcohol taken into the system comes in direct contact with the brain, changing the structures of this organ. The structure of the brain is also changed, indirectly by the poor quality of the blood, impared circulation, diminished activity of the organs of excretion, less supply of blood, impure in quality, and channels for the removal of the worn out and waste material are not very active. The nerve cells of the gray matter are more or less fatty and shrunken, as a result from this shrinkage, the whole cerebum becomes smaller and the space thus made becomes filled with a watery fluid. Alcoholic drinks do not cause so many sudden deaths because the brain loses its power before the heart ceases to beat. The poison affects the cerebrum before it does the medulla. The man becomes unconscious before he has taken enough to check the action of all the centers of the medulla.

MULES ARE VALUABLE.

They Are Not More Vicious, Eat Less and Outwork the Horse.

Much may be said in favor of the mule as a faithful, economical adjunct of the farm and in the tireless performance of farm labor for a period of possibly twenty-five years. Mules have been underestimated in the northern states, but the fact is they are sturdy, tireless, long lived workers. They require less and coarser feed than the horse. They can outwork the horse season after season—are still young after the horse has succumbed. They are not more vicious than horses. On the contrary, they will endure abuse more patiently.

A prominent breeder of horses and mules declares that three mules constantly worked will live upon the same amount of forage consumed by two horses of ordinary size worked in the same way and the mules will stand in better order than the horses so fed and worked. Still, it is not true economy to work or keep any animal on low fare, and the mule responds as quickly as any animal to good feeding and kind treatment. Friends of the mules, those who have bred and fed and worked these animals and are sure of their ground, for argument say that for steadiness and intelligence and for profit the mules on the farm will far burden bearing and drudgery more than hold their own.

In the far west mules are being rented at stipulated monthly sums. This is a queer business, but a necessary one in these days of high prices. This renting is now carried on in the southwestern corner of the United States principally. The charge for the use of a team of mules, with harness, is high—$20 to $25 a month, not including feed bills, which the renter must pay. The owner must stand losses by death through natural causes, but mules killed through negligence must be paid for by the renter.

Of some 350,000 mules sold annually in this country at present Missouri furnishes perhaps 70,000, Tennessee 60,000, Texas over 50,000 and Kentucky about an equal number, the sales being double the number foaled. The mules of the states in the northwest are very large of bone, body, substance and power, but have not usually the style, finish and fine sleek coats of southern mules. In the south mule breeding is a most important industry and has been for more than a century.

For general farm work it is preferable to breed heavy mares to a large, heavy jack, so that the offspring may be expected to show good weight and size. We want the larger class of mules in the northwest. A fine mule jack ought to be at least fifteen hands high, with a good accompaniment of the weight—head, ear, foot, bone and length—coupled with broad chest, wide hips and well set, upstanding style. The stallion, its sire and their progeny often show fine coats and fine finish. Still, the largest type is preferable to the coach. Color is not generally important in the relation to breeding qualities, but black, with light points, is perhaps the most favored color in jacks. The black jack will probably get the greatest proportion of good colored colts from mares of all colors.

Dipping Is Profitable.

Dipping is profitable. Always dip when the wool is short, as less dip is consumed and ticks will be more apt to leave the sheep's body. Commercial dips are good, but some farmers make their own with tobacco, sulphur and carbolic acid.

THE VETERINARY

Be sure the bit is not so narrow as to irritate and pain the mouth of the horse. Such condition leads to uneasiness, which often may result in the horse taking the bit in his teeth and bolting in sheer desperation.

Docking Lambs.

A good plan to pursue in docking lambs is as follows: Tie a cord tightly about the lamb's tail one inch from the body. With a pair of pruning shears clip off the tail just below the cord. Rub carbolated vaseline on the wound and remove the string at night.

Vaccination For Blackleg.

Blackleg is contagious, being due to germs, and there is no special condition certain to induce the trouble. It usually is seen in young cattle that are thriving fast on rich feeding after a period of spare feeding. Vaccination is the only sure preventive. Medicines cannot be depended upon to ward off the disease, nor are setons effective.

Dehorn In Cool Weather.

If the animals are dehorned in warm weather it is well to apply some pine tar with a view to keeping flies from the wound. Some operators do this in nearly all cases, thinking that it facilitates healing. The dehorning operation should always, when possible, be performed in cool weather and upon animals which have at least attained the age of two years.

VOTE ON PRIMARY

Electors of Charlevoix County Will Next Spring

Question of Direct Nomination of Circuit Judge and County Officers.

Out of 105 cities in Michigan twenty-five must hold an enrollment the second Monday in January preliminary to holding a primary election to nominate city officers for the spring election, according to Secretary of State Martindale. One or two are not included for the reason that they do not elect any municipal officers this spring.

The primary will be held under the provisions of the revised direct nomination act, which requires all cities above 30,000 population to nominate municipal officers at a primary election and all other cities to use the system, if any political party ever has adopted it for nominating a city ticket.

At the spring election every judicial circuit in the state must vote on the proposition of nominating Circuit judges at primary elections and all counties not now using the system for nominating county officers must vote on the question of adopting it.

The list of cities brought under the provisions of the act this spring is as follows: Alpena, Benton Harbor, Bay City, Big Rapids, Beaverton, Eaton Rapids, Grand Rapids Flint, Hillsdale, Ludington, Port Huron, St. Johns, Manistique, Manistee, Marquette, Muskegon, Muskegon Heights, Mason, Midland, Petoskey, St. Joseph, St. Louis, Sault Ste. Cities of Michigan must prepare at the beginning of the new year to hold enrollments for various primary elections. Under the revised law many of them will have to hold an enrollment on the second Monday in January in order that voters may nominate municipal officers under that system for the spring election.

It is announced at the office of the secretary of state that the law requires the nomination of municipal officers under the primary system in all cities of less than 70,000 population where any one political party has named its candidates by means of that system. A list is being made up of cities coming under the law and there are already twenty-six listed with more to follow.

In many of these the Prohibition party brings the city under the primary law, that organization having used the system more than the other parties in nominating city tickets. The law provides that enrollment must be held in these cities next month and notice will be sent to each as soon as the department ascertains which municipalities are affected.

The Ivy Drug Store Offers a Remedy for Catarrh—The Medicine Costs Nothing if it Fails.

When a medicine effects a successful treatment in a very large majority of cases, and when we offer that medicine on our own personal guarantee that it will cost the user nothing if it does not completely relieve catarrh, it is only reasonable that people should believe us, or at least put our claim to a practical test when we take all the risk. These are facts which we want the people to substantiate. We want them to try Rexall Mucu-Tone, a medicine prepared from a prescription of a physician with whom catarrh was a specialty, and who has a record of thirty years of enviable success to his record.

We receive more good reports about Rexall Mucu-Tone than we do of all other catarrh remedies sold in our store, and if more people only knew what a thoroughly dependable remedy Rexall Mucu-Tone is, it would be the only catarrh remedy we would have any demand for.

Rexall Mucu-Tone is quickly absorbed and by its therapeutic effect tends to disinfect and cleanse the entire mucus membrane tract, to destroy and remove the parasites which injure the membranous tissues to sooth the irritation and heal the soreness, stop the mucous discharge, build up strong, healthy tissues and relieve the blood and system of diseased matter. Literary Notes

The Lonely and Isolated Girl

"The girl who thinks constantly about self is a good deal like the girl who is constantly glancing at herself in the mirror," says Anna B. McCall in Woman's Home Companion for January. "Have you ever noticed how by and by people turn away from such a girl to some one whose eyes can meet theirs self-forgetfully, some one whose attention they can keep? So the girl is finally left alone with herself and the mirror. In the same way the girl who falls into the habit of thinking of self is gradually left more and more alone, her life becomes gradually more and more isolated. Do you girls know what the word isolated really means? The word "isola" is the Italian for "island." Isolated means to be like an island—cut off, that is, from the mainland. The life of the girl who talks and thinks about self is gradually more and more cut off from all the great wonderful mainland of human sympathy and interests. She is cut off from helping others as others are cut off from helping her. The world of joy and sorrow and interest and love go on without her.

"Who are the most delightful and sympathetic people you know? The ones, I will warrant, whose lives are a part of the mainland of human life who, when they meet you, are not so eager to tell you of their health and their affairs as they are eager to know about yours. And the most entertaining and charming conversationalists? They are those who tell you about other people, not those who tell you about themselves; they are those who interest you in things outside themselves and yourself. And the most beautiful lives? The rule applies here, too. They are those which have forgotten themselves in love for others."

THE DAIRYMAN

Scientists tell us that 6 cents' worth of milk has as much nutriment in it as 15 cents' worth of beefsteak, and it is much easier to digest.

The Dual Purpose Cow.

The dual purpose cow may be all right for some farmers, but she does not give as much milk as the dairy cow and eats considerably more, nor does she produce as much beef as the beef cow and eats just about as much.

Value of the Silo.

The silo is the best method of preserving one of the best and cheapest milk foods there is. The man who can grow corn successfully, whether for beef or milk, should not fail to have one. Then if he can grow red clover or alfalfa well he is doubly dressed.

Right Use of Separator.

Every user of a cream separator should be careful to see that the machine is not run at too low a speed. Instances have been found where from this cause skimmilk has contained butter fat to the amount of 1 per cent. This is a costly mistake and one that can easily be rectified. It has been demonstrated that the separator run by a small gasoline engine is cheaper than the one run by hand. In the business of dairying the small things count a great deal.

Skimmilk Is Valuable.

A well known breeder of Guernseys, when asked how he reckoned the value of skimmilk, answered as follows:

"If fed to young pigs less than 200 pounds weight, when live pork is worth $5 per hundred, I count skimmilk worth 30 cents a hundred pounds. If fed to grade Guernsey heifer calves, I count it worth from 50 to 60 cents a hundred. That is, I can sell the heifers at ten months of age and make the milk net me that per hundred. If fed to registered calves it is certainly worth from $1 to $2 per hundred pounds, for I know of no other feed that will make up for a lack of skimmilk in securing a profitable growth on a calf. The only trouble I ever had with skimmilk was a lack of it. But the way farmers usually feed it and handle it convinces me that they really know but little of its value."

A BLOW IN JAMAICA

Things That Happen When a Big Storm Breaks Loose There.

A WEST INDIAN HURRICANE.

It Will Leap Out of a Clear Sky and Level Almost Everything In Its Path—Then Comes a Torrential Downpour That Ends In a Flood.

"Have you ever been through a West Indian hurricane?" said a man who has lived in the tropics on and off for a number of years. "Do you want to know what the experience is like?

"A hurricane will leap out of a clear sky, sweep down on a city, blow everything in its path flat and pass on. Then follows the tail of the hurricane, a steady breeze blowing in the same direction, but at a much lower velocity. This is likely to continue for many hours, sometimes for many days, and is always accompanied by a torrential downpour of rain.

"I was in Kingston, Jamaica, at the time of the hurricane of 1903. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon I was in my office on the top floor of a rickety wooden building. As suddenly as a clap of thunder the room went dark.

"I had a pretty good idea of what was about to happen and, going to the window, looked out across the roofs. A black cloud had whirled up out of the southwest, obscuring the sun, but the mountains back of the city were still golden with light.

"In less than a quarter of an hour the wind reached us. The first structure that went was a wooden watch tower about 60 feet high that had been used in the old days to locate ships approaching the harbor. It had weathered all previous hurricanes, but this time it went down like a house of cards. Spars of lumber from that tower were carried as far as twenty blocks before they came to the ground.

"Then the spire of the church went, the roofs of a good many residences were torn off, and some fine palm trees in the public gardens snapped off about halfway from the ground. Buildings in Kingston, however, are calculated to stand a pretty severe blow. They are built only a few stories high, and the roofs present a broad and comparatively flat surface to the wind. Considering the velocity at which that hurricane was traveling, the damage was not great. Even my crazy office building withstood it. But the tail of the thing followed, with a heavier rain than I have ever seen before or since. To say that it came down in bucketfuls would be mild. It was as if the clerk of the weather had taken the plug out of some huge vat suspended above our heads and allowed the water to plump straight down on us.

"In three hours the macadam on the streets had been washed into the harbor. The street outside my window was a rushing river as much as four feet deep in places. I saw a cart try to cross it, but with the water above the axle of the wheel and the horse's legs being washed away from under it it was an impossible task, and the driver turned back. Big casks and packing cases were dancing on the surface like corks.

"As you can imagine, I did not get home to supper that evening. It was 8 o'clock before the rain stopped and the water in the streets had drained into the harbor. Even then traffic could not begin to reorganize itself.

"The trolley car tracks had been washed out, and no cars were running. Cabs, however, were doing a roaring business, and eventually I got a cabman to drive me home for three times his customary charge.

"The damage to property in Kingston mounted up to hundreds of thousands of dollars, but the real destruction was wrought in the country districts. Floods wiped out many a negro village and sent the flimsy houses floating down the rivers. The railroads were tied up for nearly a week. Every banana tree in the path of the hurricane was uprooted. Oh, yes, a West Indian hurricane can do a lot of damage when it gets busy.

"Loss of life, did you say? Of course there was. Nearly 200 people were killed throughout the island on that occasion, but we grow accustomed to that in the West Indies. We expect a hurricane every once in awhile, and we know that it will take its toll of human life when it comes. If you had been telling the story you would probably have mentioned that first of all, but sudden death is so common below the tropic of Cancer that we get callous, I suppose."—New York Sun.

Horse Lore.

Be careful how you turn out to grass in the autumn a horse that has been accustomed to a dry stable.

He is poorly prepared to stay out in the cold rain, much less to lie on the wet ground.

The exposure is too great and can only work harm. Lung troubles may follow.

Nothing improves the coat of a horse so much or so quickly as a little ground flaxseed mixed with his daily grain ration.

Never feed or water a tired horse until he has rested at least an hour.

Sponge out the mouth and nose with cool water and rub the legs and body well as soon as the stable is reached.

If water has been withheld for a long time, give only a few swallows at a time.

As heavy work slackens, slacken on the heavy feed. Thousands of horses are ruined every year by overfeeding while on light work.

It is never well to give animals impure or muddy water, but the horse is especially apt to be affected badly by that practice. In fact, horses will not drink such water if they can help it. Do your best to help it.

Shoe every horse as lightly as is possible for the labor he is to perform and thus avoid needless concussion and jar to feet and legs.

After removing a saddle apply plenty of cold water with a sponge. This closes the pores, and no injury or swelling will follow.

It is a good plan to girth a thick felt separately about the horse under a side-saddle.

This affords a surface for the saddle to move on and lessens the danger of chafing or bruising.

Be sure that your bridle and saddle fit and are properly put on.

Never use a narrow bit. Buy the largest and easiest one that you can find.

Beef and Butter Fat.

An expert says it costs just as much to produce a pound of beef as it does a pound of butter fat, and the beef brings to the producer only 6 cents a pound, while the fat is worth 30 cents and better to him. We are looking for the time when the dairy cow will displace the beef steer. The time is coming when the workingman will pack a pound of cheese in his lunch pail the same as does the Britisher when he goes to work, and then beef will be the luxury of the rich, as it is all over Europe today. This evolution will provide labor for more people and will go largely toward solving the social status of the future in more ways than one.

The Dehorned Animal.

The dehorned animal is safer to handle and of a more peaceable disposition. The defenseless beast has no particular inclination to fight when powerless to do much harm.

"Have you done anything to make the world your debtor?"

"No," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "I don't believe in encouraging bad habits. My ledger assures me I have managed to make the world pay as it goes." Washington Star that no harm could come to them if they faced the situation boldly. The Americans would not land on British soil; it would precipitate war with England. They would not dare to attempt a bombardment; Chase was a liar, a mountebank, a dog! After shouting himself hoarse in his frenzy of despair he finally succeeded in forcing the men to get up steam in the company's tug.

All this time the officers of the American warship were dividing their attention between land and sea. Another vessel was coming out of the misty horizon. The men on board knew it to be a British man-of-war!

Suddenly a party of white men appeared behind the startled Rasula. A hundred eager hands were extended, a hundred voices cried out for mercy, a hundred Mohammedans 'beat' their heads in abject submission.

Hollingsworth Chase, Lord Depplugham and a familiar figure in an ill fitting red jacket and forage cap strode firmly, defiantly between the rows of humble Japanese. Close behind them came a tall, resolute grenadier of the Rapp-Thorberg army.

"Make way there! Make way!" Mr Bowles was crying, brandishing the antique broadsword that had come down to Wyckholme from the dark ages. "Stand aside for the British government! Make way for the American!"

Rasula's jaw hung limp in the face of this amazing exhibition of courage on the part of the enemy. He was glaring insanely at the calm, triumphant face of the man from Brodney's who was now advancing upon him with the assurance of a conqueror.

"You see, Rasula, I have called for the cruiser, and it has come at my bidding." Turning to the crowd that surged up from behind, cowed and cringing, Chase said: "It rests with you. If I give the word that ship will blow you from the face of the earth. I am your friend, people. I would do you no harm, but good. You have been misled by Rasula. Rasula, you are not a fool. You can save yourself even now. I am here as the servant of these people, not as their master. I intend to remain here until I am called back by the man who sent me to you. You have"—

Rasula uttered a shriek of rage. He had been crouching back among his cohorts, panting with fury. Now he sprang forward, murder in his eyes. His arm was raised, and a great pistol was leveled at the breast of the man who faced him so coolly, so confidently. Depplugham shouted and took a step forward to divert the aim of the frenzied lawyer.

A revolver cracked behind the tall American, and Rasula stopped in his tracks. There was a great hole in his forehead. His eyes were bursting. He sank to the ground dead!

The soldier from Rapp-Thorberg, a smoking pistol in his hand, the other raised to his helmet, stepped to the side of Hollingsworth Chase.

"By order of her serene highness, sir," he said quietly.

"Good God!" gasped Chase, passing his hand across his brow. Depplugham, repressing a shudder, addressed the stunned natives:

"Take the body away. May that be the end of all assassins!"

* * * * * * *

The King's Own came alongside the American vessel in less than an hour. Accompanied by the British agent, Mr Bowles, Chase and Depplugham left the dock in the company's tug and steamed out toward the two cruisers. The American had made no move to send men ashore.

Standing on the forward deck of the swift little tug, Chase unconsciously accounted for the timely arrival of the two cruisers.

"Three weeks ago I sent out letters by the mail steamer, to be delivered to the English or American commanders, wherever they might be found. Undoubtedly they were met while in the same port. That is why I was so positive that help would come, sooner or later. I knew that we'd need help, and I knew that if I brought the cruisers my power over these people would never be disturbed again."

"My word!" exclaimed the admiring Bowles.

"Chase, you may be theatric, but you are the most dependable chap the world has ever known," said Depplugham, and he meant it.

The warships remained off the harbor all that day. The British captain consented to leave a small detachment of marines in the town to protect Chase and the bank. To a man the islanders pledged fealty to the cause of peace and justice. They shouted the names of Chase and Allah in the same breath and demanded of the latter that he preserve the former's beard for all eternity.

The King's Own was to convey the liberated heirs to Aden, whither the cruiser was bound. At that port a P. and O. steamer would pick them up. One white man elected to stay on the island with Hollingsworth Chase, who steadfastly refused to desert his post until Sir John Brodney indicated that his mission was completed. That one man was the wearer of the red jacket, the bearer of the king's commission in Japat, the undaunted Sir Bowles.

The Princess Genevra, the wistful light deepening hourly in her blue gray eyes, avoided being alone with the man whom she was leaving behind. She had made up her mind to accept the fate inevitable. He had reconciled himself to the ending of an impossible dream. There was nothing more to say except farewell.

The last day dawned. The sun smiled down upon them. The soft breeze of the sea whispered the curse of destiny into their ears. It crooned the song of heritage; it called her back to the fastnesses where love may not venture in.

The chateau was in a state of upheaval. The exodus was beginning. The princess waited until the last moment. She went to him. He was standing apart from the rest, coldly indifferent to the pangs he was suffering.

"I shall love you always," she said simply, giving him her hand—"always, Hollingsworth." Her eyes were wide and hopeless; her lips were white.

He bowed his head. "May God give you all the happiness that I wish for you," he said. "The end?"

She looked steadily into his eyes for a long time, searching his soul for the love that never dies. Then she gently withdrew her hands and stood away from him, humbled in her own soul.

"Yes," she whispered. "Goodby."

He straightened his shoulders and drew a deep breath through compressed nostrils. "Goodby! God bless you!" was all that he said.

She left him standing there. The wall between them was too high, too impregnable, for even love to storm.

Lady Depplugham came to him there a moment later. "I am sorry," she said tenderly. "Is there no hope?"

"There is no hope for her!" he said bitterly. "She was condemned too long ago."

On the pier they said goodby to him. He was laughing as gayly and as blithely as if the world held no sorrows in all its mighty grasp.

"I'll look you up in London," he said to the Depplughams. "Remember, the real trial is yet to come. Goodby, Browne. Goodby, all. You may come again another day."

The launch slipped away from the pier. He and Bowles stood there, side by side, pale faced, but smiling, waving their handkerchiefs. He felt that Genevra was still looking into his eyes even when the launch crept up under the walls of the distant ship.

Slowly the great vessel got under way. The American cruiser was already low on the horizon. There was a single shot from the King's Own, a reverberating farewell.

There was a single shot from the King's Own.

Hollingsworth Chase turned away at last. There were tears in his eyes, and there were tears in those of Mr Bowles.

"Bowles," said he, "it's a beastly shame they didn't think to say goodby to old man Skaggs. He's in the same grave with us."

Swiss Goats.

A herd of five imported Swiss milk goats has just been received at the farm of the agricultural experiment station at the University of Wisconsin for co-operative tests on the breeding and rearing of milk goats to determine their usefulness, economy of milk production and relation to other classes of live stock. This type of goats, known as the Schwarzenburg-Guggesberger breed, is noted for its large milk production, the milk being of particular value for infants and invalids, since goats are practically immune to tuberculosis. These goats are kept in Switzerland as a chief source of food for poor people. There are very few in the United States, and this is believed to be the first time a careful test of their usefulness has been attempted in this country.

Heaves Hard to Cure.

There is no cure for heaves after the disease is thoroughly organized. In such cases the lungs are broken down in structure, and medicine does not repair the damage. Give half an ounce of Fowler's solution of arsenic night and morning. Wet all food. Feed grass in summer and wet oat straw in preference to hay. Allow double the usual period of rest before working after meals.

A handful of oilmeal daily in the horse's ration will help put a gloss upon his coat.

MEMORIAL TO IDA LEWIS'S DEEDS

Lifeboat Named In Honor of the Life Saving Heroine.

SELF BAILING, VERY BUOYANT

Crew of Motor Driven Craft Claim She Can Breast Any Storm That Can Be Breasted by an Ocean Liner—Built Out of Mahogany.

Ida Lewis, the farfamed heroine of the Lime Rock light at Newport, R. I., has again been honored by being made the sponsor for a new motor lifeboat which, it is declared, will inaugurate an entirely new epoch in the heroic work of the life saving crews throughout the world.

For years those men in Washington who are at the head of the life saving service have been searching for a boat which could brave and live through any storm on the worst coast in the United States. For half a dozen years Ida Lewis has been saving lives single handed in storms before which the strongest men would quail. Finally the perfect lifeboat has been discovered and built, and the men who were responsible for it have insisted that it bear the name of the Grace Darling of America.

Brenton's Point life saving station, on the southern end of the island of Rhode Island, is the proud possessor of this new lifeboat, and in the Ida Lewis the Brenton's Point crew predict that they will make rescues which have never been equaled since 1870.

Built of Mahogany.

The Ida Lewis is constructed, throughout her entire length of thirty-six feet, of mahogany. With her extra space she will be able to do much better and more effective work. Her six cylinder engines develop thirty-eight horsepower. So great is her buoyancy that she could be cut into seven pieces and each one of the seven pieces would remain afloat.

She is self righting and self bailing. Along her keel she carries 1,480 pounds of gun metal, while to her bottom are attached seventy copper tanks. Seven air tight compartments make it impossible for her to be sunk, even though her skin be punctured below the self bailing scuppers.

The adoption of motor power by life saving crews means a great saving of human strength at a time when it is sorely needed. The statistics of the Washington office show that on an average the life of a human being is saved from shipwreck every ninety minutes along the shores of the United States. In 1907 5,3 0 lives were imperiled, but only twenty-nine persons were drowned out of forty-nine vessels which were completely destroyed. With motor life saving boats the remarkably small percentage of lives lost at sea will be materially reduced, say the life saving experts.

Can Be Put Out In Worst Storms.

The Atlantic coast, and especially the section around Cape Cod, is the most dangerous part of the seaboard of the United States.

When a storm is raging and the angry white tops of immense waves are driven before the gale with all the speed of bullets the work of the life saving crews is perilous in the extreme. When the red glare of the Coston signals lights up the beaches and the riot of surf, telling the surrounding stations that a boat is doomed, the crew which goes out to the rescue throws itself into the very jaws of death.

Often the lifeboat is lifted like a cork when the crew attempt to launch it and tossed back on the beach again. Sometimes the boat is successfully launched through the breakers only to find that the undertow is so strong that it is impossible to make headway against it.

Such an experience as this is impossible for a boat like the Ida Lewis. It is true that she is too large and heavy to be taken out of the water when she is not in use. She must be anchored in a sheltered spot. Under the lee of Brenton's Point is an ideal anchorage, and here the Ida Lewis will lie at all times. When the occasion calls, her crew will tumble out from their quarters and put out to her. Then there is no gale strong enough and no waves high enough to prevent her from going straight out to sea. Trips that would be utterly impossible for the ordinary lifeboat will be quite possible for the Ida Lewis. And in addition to being able to put out in the worst storms she will do so without exhausting her crew for the supreme struggle of life saving.

Monument to the Real Ida Lewis.

The Brenton's Point life savers are forced to cover a large territory, and the Ida Lewis will be particularly welcome to them on that account. The Ida Lewis will shove up into the teeth of any gale without any hesitation, automatically freeing herself from the tons of water which crash down upon her by means of her self bailing scuppers. Any storm which can be breasted by an ocean liner can be breasted by the Ida Lewis, say the members of her crew.

The Ida Lewis will stand as a monument to the real Ida Lewis, the heroine of the Lime Rock light, and nowhere is her name more venerated than at Brenton's Point, the only life saving station to build a lifeboat memorial to her deeds.

OUR ROADS COMPARED Reasons Why France Has Best Highways In Europe.

HER METHOD IS SUPERIOR.

Road Laws In United States Until Recently Were the Same as England's of the Colonial Days—Germany's Unique System.

The present road situation in the United States may be briefly summed up as follows:

In mileage we have the most tremendous system of roads which any country has ever possessed since the world began. According to a careful road census, the length of all of our roads amounts to 2,455,000 miles. The most liberal estimate of our annual expenditure on these roads, both in money and labor, was a fraction over $379,000,000 in 1904, or about $1.05 per capita. At the same rate this would be an expenditure of about $500,000,000 a year at the present time.

According to our road census, we have less than 40,000 miles of stone surfaced road, or about 2 per cent of the total mileage. We have 108,000 miles of gravel road, or about 5 per cent of the total mileage. Small as our annual expenditure for roads has been, it has aggregated during the thirty year period from 1870 to 1900 a total of upward of $1,800,000,000. We may therefore say that the road building in the United States is, considering area, population and wealth, at the same point at which it stood thirty years ago and the seventeen hundred and odd million dollars have produced few appreciable results.

When we turn to the subject of road administration in the United States we find that about half of the states are operating under practically the same road laws as prevailed in England when America was a colony. This system of road administration provides for the payment of road taxes partly in labor and localizes the work to an extreme degree by placing in authority the district or township road overseers or road supervisors, no requirement being made to insure skill or knowledge of road building on the part of these petty officials. With few exceptions no system of accounting is in force, so that an intelligent idea may be obtained as to the disposition of the road tax, and no definite lines of authority are established such as would guarantee the wise and equitable conduct of the work.

THE TYPICAL ROAD OF OUR RURAL DISTRICTS.
[From Good Roads Magazine, New York.]

A number of states have adopted in principle or practice, or both, the system of centralizing under a state highway department the conduct of all or part of the road work of the state, thereby securing uniformity in methods, economy in administration and skill in supervision. In some of the state highway departments the work is educational and investigative, with a view to ultimately giving these departments administrative powers.

It is not possible in a short article to enter into a discussion of the various systems of state aid in effect in this country. Suffice it to say that the principle of state aid and supervision constitutes the germ of the only road administration which has proved successful in other countries.

This movement is gaining headway at a very rapid rate, and when we consider that it has been little more than a decade and a half since its inception the fact that half of the states have adopted it in principle and have actually expended from state treasuries considerably over $56,000,000 we may well feel encouraged for the future of road building in this country.

The striking feature of the French road system is the skilled supervision provided in every grade of road work and in every unit of the administrative organization. The basis of the system is the school of roads and bridges, one of the finest technical schools in the world, maintained at the expense of the national government. In this school are trained the highway engineers to whom are intrusted the building and maintenance of the roads of France.

At the head of the administrative organization is an inspector general of bridges and highways, under whom are chief engineers in charge of the road work of single departments and communes. Single arrondissements are under the direction of ordinary engineers and underengineers, the latter being equivalent in rank to noncommissioned officers in the army. The subdivisions are under the direction of principal conductors and ordinary conductors. Next in line come the foremen of construction gangs, the clerks employed at headquarters and finally the cantonniers, or patrolmen, each having from four to seven kilometers of highway under his immediate supervision.

Probably the most important unit in this great army of workers is the cantonnier, or patrolman, who has charge of a single section of the road. He keeps the ditches open, carefully fills holes and ruts with broken stone, removes dust and deposits of sand and earth after heavy rains, trims the trees and bushes, and when ordinary work is impossible he breaks stone and transports it to points where it is likely to be needed. He brings all matters requiring attention to the notice of his chief.

There are at the present time 149,759 miles of road in England, for which the annual expenditure for the year 1905 to 1906 amounted to $78,050,000. It is therefore evident that the annual expenditure per mile of road amounts to about $520. In view of the fact that most of the principal roads of England have already been constructed, this large annual expenditure would appear to be devoted in a large measure to maintenance. It would seem that a system which requires an annual outlay of $520 per mile for the entire mileage must be ineffective and costly. The explanation of this is found perhaps in the fact that in England the maintenance of the public highways devolves entirely on local authorities, these numbering about 1,300.

As to skilled supervision it may be said that no qualifications are required by law to be possessed by the men in charge of road building and maintenance, but it is the general practice in the important districts to appoint experienced highway engineers for this work.

* * * * * * *

Germany is a federation of states, and it follows that road administration is conducted separately by each state of the empire. The imperial government exercises very little control over the highways and does not in any way contribute to the expense of their construction and maintenance.

A striking feature of the Saxon road system is the practice of planting fruit trees along the roads.

Each canton has at the head of its road system an engineer with capable assistants. The engineers and their assistants must have an academic education and possess a diploma from the Polytechnic institute, while the road masters are required to have a good technical education.—L. W. Page in Good Roads Magazine.

HIGHWAYS IN THE WEST.

Use of the Automobile by Farmers Aiding the Improvement Movement.

Road improvements in the west, already noticeable to a slight degree, are sure to follow when the farmers of that section awake to the realization of their condition as compared with some of those of the east. Nothing will arouse the farmers to this so much as the use of the automobile, and it will be the more general use of the car by the farmer that will result in better roads.

In sections where farmers are using cars to any extent road improvements are already noticed, but there is still room for more, and more there will be in the near future. Motoring is most enjoyed on good smooth roads. Farmers owning cars realize this as well as any, and not only are they bestirring themselves toward appropriations for good highways, but are in many cases furnishing the labor necessary for road betterments.

In some farming sections of the west automobile owners can be picked out by a glance at the roadway in their immediate neighborhood. Near their houses rough, uneven surfaces have been smoothed off and soft, slippery roadways resurfaced. Each farmer seems to take interest in the roads near his own home. When more farmers have cars, and they are buying them rapidly, there will be more short stretches of perfect roads, and at some future time, not far distant, the stretch will be unbroken.

FERRO CEMENT ROADS.

France Trying Experiments With Highways Made of This Material.

Ferro cement roads are being experimented with in France. The substance is made of cement mixed with straw. To make a slab or block of ferro cement a mass of iron straw is placed in the mold, and there is poured over it cement sufficiently fluid to penetrate into all the interstices of the iron and completely cover it. When the whole has set, the core of iron thus intimately incorporated gives to the block a great resistance to breakage and to traction, at the same time furnishing elasticity to compression which enables it to stand superficial shocks. A brick of ferro cement one and three-fifths inches thick has supported during crushing tests a pressure of about sixty-five tons to the square inch. In breakage tests the resistance was quadruple that of ordinary cement. Resistance to wear was no less remarkable.

The Use of Wide Tires.

As to the desirability of the use of the wide tires there can be no question. The most casual observation will suffice to convince any one of the damage which a heavily laden wagon equipped with the ordinary sharp rounded, narrow tires will produce on any road. There is also another and perhaps even greater advantage to be gained by the use of wide tires—namely, the increased hauling capacity attained.

The sweet pea dates back to 1699, when the plant was first cultivated by a priest in Sicily.

ARTHUR L. FITCH IS NAMED

As Choice of Representative Francis H. Dodds

FOR POSTMASTER OF CHARLEVOIX

Which Ends a Warm Contest for the Appointment

Choice of Mr. Fitch Meets With General Approval—Wins Out in Field of Four Candidates.

Last week Congressman Dodds announced that he had recommended the appointment of Arthur L. Fitch as postmaster of this city, thus ending a contest which has been rather a warm one although good natured, for the past few months. Originally there were four candidates for the place, the present postmaster, D. F. Meech, who relied upon his record as a public official and the backing of the political organization of the county, Ex-Mayor S. M. Rose, and Henry C. Cooper, each of whom are well and favorably known and Mr. Fitch, whose record both as a public official and a private citizen, was that of a clean progressive young man who stood for higher ideals in civic life and the belief that public officials were indeed servants of the people and, who had the support of the majority of the business men of the city.

As time passed on both Mr. Cooper and Mr. Rose withdrew, Mr. Cooper joining forces with Mr. Meech while Mr. Rose sided with Mr. Fitch.

While the COURIER may be prejudiced in the matter, having espoused the cause of Mr. Fitch, we have only heard one adverse criticism of the appointment, it seeming to meet with general approval, on every hand.

Mr. Fitch came to this city immediately after graduation from the U. of M. and has filled the position of Circuit Court Commissioner and at the present time, is U. S. Commissioner and City Attorney.

Mr. Meech is well known to nearly every body in Charlevoix county having served several years as county clerk before becoming postmaster. While his friends were disappointed, of course, in not seeing him again placed behind the window, the general comment is "How could Mr. Dodds have done anything else."

Mr. Meech's future plans we are unable to state to a certainty, but we are informed that he intends to join the farmer's ranks and raise "Fruit with Flavor" and high grade poultry.

DEATH OF MRS. COHEN

One of the Leading Business Women of the City

Had Been Resident of Charlevoix Nine Years—Leaves Large Family.

Mrs. Sarah Cohen, one of the leading merchants of this city, died at her residence, Tuesday afternoon, of apoplexy, after a lingering illness of three weeks.

Sarah J. List was born in Russian Poland, in 1861, and was married to Goodwin Cohen in 1883. They came to Traverse City in 1885, where they resided until Mr. Cohen's death in 1897, when Mrs. Cohen and family removed to East Jordan where they resided until 1900 when they removed to this city.

Mrs. Cohen started with a very small store but by her business ability and skill pushed the business to the front until it is now one of the largest in the city.

Three sons, Meyer J., Harry and Mose and four daughters, Eva Lottie, Bessie and Tibbie and a sister Mrs. Lena Levinson, all of this city, survive her, besides a sister, Mrs. I. Frank, of St. Paul, and two brothers, Sam Goldbloom, of St. Paul and Louis List of London, England.

Funeral services were held this morning, at the residence, conducted by a Jewish Rabbi of Petoskey. The interment will take place at Traverse City this afternoon.

The business will be continued by the surviving members of the family.

PRAISE FOR VAN PELT

Central Lake Torch Tells What he Has Done for Charlevoix

As an Indication of Faith in Charlevoix and Northern Michigan.

The Central Lake Torch of last week concludes an article description of our new post office building in the following manner:

Taken altogether the building is a credit to Charlevoix and northern Michigan.

Besides the building Mr. Van Pelt has erected the past summer two cement block buildings on Van Pelt place, the alley upon which the postoffice abuts, one of them a modern newspaper building of one story, occupied by the COURIER, and the other a double two story building suitable for workshops of any kind.

The unoccupied portions of these buildings Mr. Van Pelt has turned over to a committee of five with D. S. Payton as chairman, for the benefit of public meetings to be held for character improvement, with the idea of an effort, by lectures, to advance the standard of civic, municipal and general government.

The erection of these buildings was an indication of Mr. Van Pelt's faith in northern Michigan—just coming into her own—and should in time bring him due recompense financially, though a due appreciation of the present benefit to the town of his selection can be a present satisfaction to him. I believe that this work was the primary inspiration of the building boom which Charlevoix has enjoyed for more than a year past, and which bids fair to last for some time to come. It has done much to disarm the opponents of local option of their standing argument that the town without the open saloon is necessarily a "dead one."

The building boom the forward impulse given Charlevoix, accentuated by the final settlement of the cement factory proposition and the immediate prospect of another railroad have put that city on an upgrade with an impetus which should carry her far toward an enviable position in the progress of Northern Michigan. Van Pelt's part in it, coming just when it did, counts for more than may be estimated, and should furnish an incentive to others, as showing what one man's work for his home town may be the means of accomplishing.

A proportionately large endeavor on the part of some of our citizens, for instance, might give Central Lake a push forward, the ultimate results of which are not to be computed in advance. We all have faith in our town and the future of Northern Michigan, can we not in some manner back it up by money and enterprise so that we may obtain the fullest reward?

CHARLEVOIX vs BELLAIRE

Basket Ball Game at Theater Friday Night

Several Teams Have Been Organized in the Schools.

For the past few weeks the students of the Charlevoix high school have been looking forward to the Charlevoix—Bellaire basket ball game with considerable interest. This will be the first game of the kind ever played in Charlevoix; the game being new to Charlevoix, both to students and town people. In this respect the local school is several years behind its neighbors Boyne City, East Jordan, Petoskey, Harbor Springs, Bellaire, Pellston, Traverse City, and in fact every other city or village which has advanced beyond the "Cy Perkins General Store" stage has been enjoying the game of basket ball for several years. In Southern Michigan it has been the most popular winter sport for ten years or more.

That the Charlevoix high school has not played basket ball before, is not the fault of the school authorities as they have looked in vain for a place in which to play. At last arrangements have been made with the opera house manager which allows the local high school to take its proper place among her sister schools. Forty boys have been practising for two weeks and more will play as soon as a schedule for the games can be arranged. The sixth, seventh, eighth grades and the review room are manifesting considerable interest and undoubtedly will each have a team. A series of games are being arranged between the four classes and probably a banner will be put up as a trophy for the class getting the championship. This means one more banner for the trophy corner and will be something which the winning class will be justly proud of.

But the young men in the school are not the only basket ball enthusiasts. Monday night twenty-five or thirty of the young ladies started practice. There will be at least three class teams among the girls. The County Normal class are practising daily and with the unusual amount of good material in the will undoubtedly give the high school girls a good game when the teams clash. The girls in the grades who so desire, are being encouraged to form teams and there is some talk of a lady teachers team. Quite a few of the present teaching force have had considerable experience on college teams and a strong team could be developed. Boyne City high school girls have organized a team and efforts will be made to schedule a game with them. This being the first year for the girls, probably no games will be scheduled with other outside teams.

Basket ball is especially to be commended as a high school sport, as it provides a wholesome form of amusement for the young people of the community during the winter months, when there is little to do in and out door way.

A member of the faculty is always present during all practices' supervising the work of the young people and keeping things in a healthy normal condition. Any one interested in basket ball will do well to step into the opera house and watch the young people practice.

This article was not written to inform the people of Charlevoix just what their children were doing outside of school hours, but in the hope that we may influence you to come to the game with Bellaire next Friday night, also the one with Boyne City one week later. The heavy expense incured in the renting of the opera house is entirely met from the treasury of the athletic association. It is evident that the game could not long be continued with its attending benefits without the financial assistance of the friends of the school. We guarantee you an exciting and pleasant evening next Friday, January 21. Come and bring your friends. The opera house will be heated and the Charlevoix City Band will furnish music before and during the game which starts promptly at eight o'clock.

SCHOOL OF INSTRUCTION

Held By Masonic Fraternity Wednesday Afternoon and Evening

Central Lake, Torch Lake, Bellaire and Charlevoix Lodges out in Force

Wednesday was a day which will be long remembered by the Masonic fraternity of this section, a school of instruction being held by Grand Lecturer Frank O. Gilbert of Bay City. Members of the fraternity were present from Central Lake, Torch Lake and Bellaire lodges.

In the afternoon the lodge was called to order by W. M. Olmstead, of Central Lake lodge, whose lodge exemplified the first degree, the work being highly satisfactory to the Grand Lecturer, as was the second degree work which was exemplified by Torch Lake Lodge under the direction of W. M. Hison, after which a recess was taken for supper.

After supper Charlevoix lodge was called to order by W. M. Allcock, who called Past Master W. H. Collins to the chair and the third degree was conferred, the grand lecturer highly complimenting the work and the charges as given by Mr. Collins, as did several of the members of the craft. Past Master W. A. Smith also received many compliments on his lecture to the members of the craft, after which a banquet was served. Dr. A. M. Wilkinson furnishing several songs and an address being delivered by A. L. Fitch, with remarks by several other members.

In conclusion a vote of thanks was given to Grand Lecturer Gilbert and an invitation was given and accepted, for another school of instruction to be held in this city during the summer season.

Passenger Train on Pere Marquette Stuck Near City Thursday.

Tuesday morning the 10:45 northbound train was snow bound near the National Boy City grounds, about two miles north of this city. The engine managed to pull through to Bay Shore and assistance was sent for, but being unable to get back to the train, the coaches were left without heat and the passengers were kept warm by a fire in the baggage car.

After the arrival of the snow plow the track was cleared so the train was able to go through to Petoskey at 8:40.

Some of the passengers walked into this city and several were brought in by John Martin in his milk wagon.

OLD OFFICERS ARE RE-ELECTED

At Meeting of Development Bureau Held Thursday.

TRAVERSE CITY STILL HEADQUARTERS

Aggressive Work Will Be Continued Another Year

Both of Charlevoix County's Directors Were Present. Plans Made for More Extensive Work Than Before.

The meeting of the directors of the Western Michigan Development Bureau held Thursday afternoon was one of much importance to the people of Charlevoix as well as to the whole of western Michigan. At this meeting the future work of the bureau was discussed and plans laid for a more aggressive, campaign than has been conducted at any time since the bureau was organized.

The directors drew up new articles of incorporation, which will broaden the scope of the workings of the bureau, and thereby allowing it to take up work that before this had been impossible for it to undertake.

The annual election of officers was held and resulted in the choice of the old officials to serve for another year. They are as follows:

President—D. H. Day, Glen Haven.

Vice president—L. F. Perkett, Traverse City.

Secretary—T. M. Sawyer Ludington.

Treasurer—B. R. Hendel, Manistee.

A committee consisting of F. O. Wickham of Frankfort, B. R. Hedel, of Manistee and Fred G. George of Detroit was apointed to draft a new set of by-laws for the government of the bureau and to report at the next meeting, which will be held the first part of February.

The committee also adopted a plan for issuing booklets to the people of western Michigan so they can have them at all times for distribution among their friends who are located in other sections of the country. This is an important move on the part of the bureau, as the success of the work will depend largely upon the amount of literature they are able to get satisfactorily distributed among the desirable class of people who have intentions of changing their location during the next few years. Any new country is built up by means of advertising and when these facts that pertain to the wonderful crops which are raised here are once sent out in the places where they will do the most good, the building up of the country is assured. We have all the resources that any country can boast of and as soon as the people in other places are made familiar with the real facts of the productiveness of the land, and of the great opportunities that await all classes of business there will be such an influx of people here that in the course of a very few years Grand Traverse region will be settled so that there will be, in reality a farmer on every available forty.

As soon as the articles of incorporation have been accepted by the state another meeting will be held, and the real work for the year mapped out, and those who will take charge of it will be started on the lines that were formulated at the meeting held Thursday.

The articles of incorporation which are to be sent to the secretary of state, make Traverse City the headquarters of the bureau permanently, so there will be no more quibbling over the location of the office, and the work can go ahead and all parties have the assurance that the bureau is a permanent affair.

The tentative plan that the committee adopted is based upon the supposition that the transportation companies will furnish the sum of $14,000 toward carrying out the work of the year, while the people of western Michigan will furnish $8,000. The plan also includes the employment of a secretary and treasurer who will be paid a salary consistent with his ability to take hold of the work of developing the country along business like lines. He will have charge of the outside work, spending his time among the different counties in the bureau.

All are sorry to learn of Miss Bessie Straw's serious illness at her home south of Charlevoix, she having taught the fall term in this same school.

Mrs. James Van Hoesan had a very serious accident at her home last Saturday afternoon. While returning from the barnyard to the house she bumped her head against a sharp board on one of the newly erected out-buildings, cutting a gash across the forehead and extending into the hair, so deep as to expose the skull. She also received a bad bruise under one eye. It is hoped that nothing serious develops. Mrs. Van Hoesan was unconscious for some time after the accident and is suffering keenly. Dr. Theilen of Charlevoix, telephoned directions for dressing the wounds.

Literary Notes

Travelling With Taft

Alfred Henry Lewis, in the January issue of Human Life, continues to throw the pitiless search light of truth on men high in the councils at Washington, whose hands pull the hidden wires of things political.

The story opens with the stealthy visit by night of a Trust yacht to the shores of Beverly, the landing of four men and their very evident desire to keep their visit to the president's cottage a profound secret. Their names will cause the reader to sit up and take notice. The writer refers to one of them as "That careless one who wrote letters to Standard Oil Archbold, comforting that little grimy thumb of satin with tales of how he was frightening Mr. Roosevelt." The leader of the quartet he describes as "The right hand of money to smother Congressional investigation of its villainies, and forge what law tools are needed to carry on its rapines."

This is the first time in print that the tale of this Beverly secret conference has been told, but it gives the key to much that President Taft was moved to do and say during last year. All the devious counsels that decided his route, and the whys and wherefores are clearly and regretlessly shown, why the home city of Senator La Follette was omitted and why that of Mr. Tawney was included.

The amazing powers wielded at the capitol by the moneyed interests are shown, and how rebellion in the house from the dictates of the arrogant Trusts, is suppressed with an iron hand.

The January installment of the series closes with the president's leave-taking at Milwaukee, the next issue takes him to Winona.

Mr. Lewis does not hesitate to call a spade a spade, and the article is written in his immitable and picturesque style, liberally spiced with humor. Human Life Publishing Co., Boston.

A new Back for an Old One How it Can be Done in Charlevoix.

The back aches at times with a dull, indescribable feeling, making you weary and restless; piercing pains shoot across the region of the kidneys, and again the loins are so lame to stoop is agony. No use to rub or apply a plaster to the back in this condition. You cannot reach the cause. Exchange the bad back for a new and stronger one. Charlevoix residents would do well to profit by the following example:

Mrs. C. E. Clapp, 937 Front St. Traverse City, Mich., says: "I can strongly recommend Doan's Kidney Pills. I used them with the best of results. Last spring I had a severe attack of kidney trouble and I was made miserable by dull, nagging backaches. My kidneys pained me and there were other symptoms of kidney trouble in evidence. Doan's Kidney Pills did me a world of good, relieving my aches and pains and strengthening my kidneys, in fact, making a general improvement. Other members of my family have taken this remedy and it has the same good effect in each case."

FEEDING THE WORK HORSE

According to an expert breeder, who has had a wide experience in the care and feeding of draft horses, horsemen have much to learn on the subject of feeding hay to horses. He says the average man allows the horse to be the judge of the amount of hay he should have, this being gauged by the animal's capacity, and thus many a good work horse is ruined. It is not necessary to feed more than one pound of hay for every hundredweight of the animal. For example, a 1,400 pound horse should get not more than fourteen pounds of hay per day.

The above amount of hay and a grain ration, composed of corn, oats and bran, mixed in the proportion of fifty pounds of corn, fifty pounds of oats and twenty-five pounds of bran will make any horse fit for a hard day's work. One will generally have to feed from one to one and a half pounds of grain per day to every hundredweight of horse. The smaller amount may do when he is at light work and the larger amount when at heavy labor. I find that such a mixture as this fed along with the amount of hay mentioned will keep a horse cheerful and make him pleasant to work. The grain ration is sufficiently fattening, while it is also flesh forming enough in character to impart a wearing quality to the muscles.

It is true that some horses will eat much more hay than the amount mentioned, but it is a mistake to increase this quantity, as a horse can only digest and assimilate a certain amount. Keep in mind that a horse's appetite generally goes beyond his powers of assimilation. In many cases horses that eat large amounts of hay become hard looking, while they have little life or snap in them. Some men go on from year to year with their horses in this condition without knowing anything about its cause. It is usually advisable to use only a small amount of hay in the morning and at noon, making the night feed somewhat more liberal, though not enough but what the horse will clean it up in a reasonable length of time and then lie down for a comfortable night's rest.

In connection with sensible hay feeding it should also be remembered that horses should receive water before and never immediately after a meal.

It goes without saying that hay should always be clean and bright, and if this is the case the kind of hay does not matter so much, though timothy and clover mixed in about equal proportions are without doubt the best. Although timothy hay is not very rich in nutrients, there is something about it that the horse dearly loves, so that it should be kept in mind that palatability has much to do with digestibility, and therefore it is wise to cater to some extent to the animal's tastes.

Those who feed thirty to forty pounds of hay a day to a work horse will take but little stock in the weights above mentioned; but, as stated before, this has not been guesswork, for it was proved during experimental work at an experiment station recently. Under such treatment horses should always look well and will put in a good day's work and be fresh afterward.

ROOTS FOR THE STOCK.

They Are Considered Best as Succulant and Supplementary Feeds.

The average farmer pays little or no attention to roots, but they are worthy of some attention, for they stand high as succulent and supplementary feeds. You cannot value roots solely by the nutriment they contain. They aid in digestion and assimilation of dry food and contribute to the healthfulness of all animals so fortunate as to get them. If fruits are of value, if not a necessity, to men, then roots and grasses have a place in feeding farm animals.

Carrots may be fed to horses and sheep, sugar beets and turnips to dry cattle and lambs, and dairy cattle and hogs relish them all. To withhold succulence, nature's great provision for thrift and health, is to lessen profits.

Carrots are slightly harder to grow than beets, but they are the best feed. Sow the seeds in rows about two and one-half feet apart. The rows should be ridged slightly, as this facilitates their culture. It is better, perhaps, to sow rather thickly, so as to insure a good stand. When the young plants are a few inches high harrow the ground with a light harrow for weed destruction and for thinning purposes. It will require only a hasty going over to put the carrot patch in shape to destroy weeds and leave the plants six to eight inches apart. A horse cultivator will complete the work. The large stock varieties are, of course, to be preferred to the fine grain—the garden kind.

Turnips are cultivated in the same way, but they come later in the season. The Swede variety should be selected. Turnips may be sown broadcast, but for large yields the row method is preferred. Mangels are grown with the least difficulty, but they are not so good as carrots or turnips. For sheep roots are almost indispensable.

REARING THE CALF

It Requires Good Judgment and the Strict Attention of the Breeder.

When calves are to be reared either for breeding uses or for growing into beef, great care should be taken to discard some at a comparatively early age. An expert says that it would pay far better to give away unpromising calves than to attempt to rear them.

It is true nevertheless that there may be instances wherein calves do not promise well at the first and unde-

A WELL BRED CALF.
[From Breeder's Gazette, Chicago.]

good development later, but these instances are the exception rather than the rule.

When calves come prematurely they seldom develop as well as when born at the proper time. It may pay to rear some pure breds that are thus born, but it is questionable if it will pay to rear such calves if they will be only worth their meat or milk value when grown. The same may be said of calves that are small and weak at birth. While some of these may develop into good animals the chances are against such a result.

Among the indications of promise in young calves are strength and vigor, shown almost as soon as born, good size and at least medium flesh, but it would be going too far to say that calves born at birth may not be possessed of good development later. Leanness at birth may have been caused by influences in the dam which may not work any serious harm to the calf.

When calves are to be reared for the dairy there are certain indications which it may be well to look for. These include an udder well formed and with teats well apart; also one of more rudimentaries, which are said by some to indicate milk force. In these and all calves six or eight teeth, well formed and well through the gums, so to speak, are also regarded as indicative of vigor.

Quality of Butter.

The quality of butter depends to a great degree upon the food and drink of the cow. She should have clean, pure water and wholesome food. Much care should be taken in the selection of the ration. The individual cow has much to do in this regard. But with respect to the part that is played in handling the product of the cow too much carelessness is evident in the processes of butter making. After churning is finished the butter and milk mixture should remain quiet for about ten minutes in order to let the butter come to the surface. A cup of cold water will hasten the process. An old recipe says: The butter should then be carefully skimmed off into a wooden bowl half full of water. The water should be repeatedly changed until it shows no indication of buttermilk. It is important that the butter should not be pressed or worked during the process of removing the milk from the butter. After this the butter may be pressed into a mass and salt to the extent of one fortieth its weight worked into it. The water should be well pressed out, but the less worked the more perfectly its granular character is maintained.

If butter is pressed firmly into earthen jars or wooden firkins and kept at a temperature of 50 or 60 degrees it may be preserved in fair condition for six or eight months.

Proper Shetland Type.

The ideal Shetland should have rotund body and its legs be short and not buckled at the knees.

In buying a pony select one that has good knee action and holds his head well up. Always avoid one that has a "sleepy" appearance.

The original Shetland ponies come from the Shetland Isles, off the extreme north coast of Scotland. It is known that ponies have inhabited these islands for nearly 200 years, but the first ponies imported to this country were brought over about the middle of the last century.

Shetlands are of all colors, and color cuts no figure in judging their points. They are easy to raise and are always in good demand.

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON

CHAPTER XXXIII.

A TOAST TO THE PAST.

THE middle of June found the Deppinghams leaving London once more, but this time not on a voyage into the mysterious south seas. They no longer were interested in the island of Japat, except as a reminiscence, nor were they concerned in the vagaries of Taswell Skaggs' will.

The estate was settled—closed!

Two months have passed since the Deppinghams departed from Japat, "for good and all." Many events have come to pass since that memorable day, not the least of which was the exchanging of £500,000, less attorneys' and executors' fees. Lady Deppingham and Robert Browne divided that amount of money and passed into legal history as the "late claimants to the estate of Taswell Skaggs."

It was Sir John Brodney's enterprise. He saw the way out of the difficulty, and he acted as pathfinder to the other and less perceiving counselors, all of whom had looked forward to an endless controversy.

The business of the Japat company and all that it entailed was transferred by agreement to a syndicate.

Never before was there such a stupendous deal in futures.

The grandchildren of the testators were ready to accept the best settlement that could be obtained. Theirs was a rather forlorn hope to begin with. When it was proposed that Agnes Deppingham and Robert Browne should accept £250,000 apiece in lieu of all claims, moral or legal, against the estate, they leaped at the chance.

They had seen but little of each other since landing in England, except as they were thrown together at the conferences. Lady Agnes went in for every diversion imaginable. For a wonder, she dragged Deppingham with her on all occasions. It was a most unexpected transformation. Their friends were puzzled. The rumor went about town that she was in love with her husband.

As for Bobby Browne, he was devoting itself to Drusilla. They sailed for New York within three days after the settlement was effected, ignoring the entitlements of a London season. The Brownes were rich. He could now become a fashionable specialist. They were worth nearly a million and a quarter in American dollars. They now had nothing in common with Taswell Skaggs. Skaggs is not a pretty name.

Mr. Britt afterward spent three weeks of incessant travel on the continent and an additional seven days at sea. In Baden-Baden he happened upon Lord and Lady Deppingham. It will be recalled that in Japat they had always professed an unholy aversion for Mr. Britt. Is it cause for wonder, then, that they declined his invitation to dine in Baden-Baden? He even proposed to invite their entire party, which included a few dukes and duchesses who were leisurely on their way to attend the long talked of nuptials in Thorberg at the end of June.

In Vienna the Deppinghams were joined by the Duchess of N., the Marchioness of B. and other fashionables. In a week all of them would be in the castle at Thorberg for the ceremony that now occupied the attention of social and royal Europe.

"And to think," said the duchess, "she might have died happily on that miserable island. I am sure we did all we could to bring it about by steaming away from the place with the plague chasing us. Dear me, how diabolically those wretches lied to the marquis! They said that every one in the chateau was dead. Lady Deppingham and buried, if I am not mistaken. It would be much better for poor Genevra if she were to be buried instead of married next week," lamented the duchess.

"Other women have married princes and got on very well," said Prince Liechtenstein.

"Oh, come now, prince," put in Lord Deppingham; "you know the sort of chap Brabetz is. There are princes and princes, by Jove."

"He's positively vile!" exclaimed the duchess, who would not mince words.

"She's entering upon a hell of a—I mean a life of hell," exploded the duke, banging the table with his fist. "That fellow Brabetz is the rottenest thing in Europe. He's gone from bad to worse so swiftly that public opinion is still months behind him."

"Nice way to talk of the groom," said the host genially. "I quite agree with you, however. I cannot understand the grand duke permitting it to go on unless, of course, it's too late to interfere."

"Poor dear! She'll never know what it is to be loved and cherished!" said the marchioness dolefully.

Lord and Lady Deppingham glanced at each other. They were thinking of the man who stood on the dock at Aratat when the King's Own sailed away.

"The grand duke is probably saying the very thing to himself that Brabetz's associates are saying in public," ventured a young Austrian count.

"What is that, pray?"

"That the prince won't live more than six months. He's a physical wreck today and a nervous one too. Take my word for it, he will be a creeping, imbecile thing inside of half a year—locomotor ataxia and all that. It's coming positively with a sharp crash."

"I've heard he has tried to kill that woman in Paris half a dozen times," remarked one of the women, taking it as a matter of course that every one knew who she meant by "that woman."

"She was really responsible for the postponement of the wedding in December, I'm told. Of course I don't know that it is true," said the marchioness, wisely qualifying her gossip. "My brother, the grand duke, does not confide in me."

"Well, my heart bleeds for her," said Deppingham.

"She's going into it with her eyes open," said the prince. "It isn't as if she hadn't been told. She could see for herself. She knows there's the other woman in Paris and— Oh, well, why should we make a funeral of it? Let's do our best to be revelers, not mourners. She'll live to fall in love with some other man. They always do. Every woman has to live at least once in her life—if she lives long enough. Come, come! Let us forget the future of the Princess Genevra, and drink to her present!"

"And to her past, if you don't mind, prince!" amended Lord Deppingham, looking into his wife's somber eyes.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

THE TITLE CLEAR.

TWO men and a woman stood in the evening glow looking out over the tranquil sea that crept up and licked the foot of the cliff. It was September. Five months had passed since the King's Own steamed away from the harbor of Aratat. The new dispensation was in full effect. During the long, sickening weeks that preceded the coming of the syndicate Hollingsworth Chase toiled faithfully, resolutely, for the restoration of order and system among the demoralized people of Japat.

With the transfer of the company's business his work was finished. Two young men from Sir John's were now settled in Aratat as legal advisers to the Islanders, Chase having declined to serve longer in that capacity.

He was now waiting for the steamer which was to take him to Cape Town on its way to England and home.

The chateau was closed and in the hands of a small army of caretakers. The three widows of Jacob von Blitz were now married to separate and distinct husbands, all of whom retained their places as heads of departments at the chateau, proving that courtship had not been confined to the white people during the closing days of the siege.

The head of the bank was Oscar Arnheimer, Mr. Bowles having been deposed because his methods were even more obsolete than his coat of armor.

Selim disposed of his lawful interest in the corporation to Ben Ali, the new vadi, and was waiting to accompany his master to America. It may be well to add that the deal did not include the transfer of Neenah. She was not for sale, said Selim to Ben Ali.

It was of Mr. Bowles that the three persons were talking as they stood in the evening glow.

"Yes, Selim," said the tall man in flannels, "he's a sort of old dog Tray, ever faithful, but not the right kind. You don't happen to know anything of old dog Tray, do you? No? I thought not. Nor you, Neenah? Well, he was"—

"Was he the one who was poisoned at the chateau, excellency?" asked Neenah timidly.

"No, my dear," he replied soberly. "If I remember my history, he died in the seventeenth century or thereabouts. It's really of no consequence, however. Any good, faithful dog will serve my purpose. What I want to impress upon you is this—it is most difficult for a faithful old dog to survive a change of masters. It isn't human nature—or dog nature, either. I'm glad that you are convinced, Neenah. But please don't tell Sahib Bowles that he is a dog."

"Oh, no, excellency!" she cried earnestly.

"She is very close mouthed, sahib," added Selim, with conviction.

"We'll take Bowles to England with us next week," said Mr. Chase cheerfully. "We'll leave Japat to take care of itself."

He lighted a fresh cigarette, tenderly fingering it before applying the match.

"I'll smoke one of hers tonight, Selim. See! I keep them apart from the others in this little gold case. I smoke them only when I am thinking. Now, run in. I want to be alone."

They left him, and he threw himself upon the green soil, his back to a tree, his face toward the distant chateau. Hours afterward the faithful Selim came out to tell him that it was bedtime. He found his master still sitting there, looking across the moonlit flat in the direction of a place in the hills where once he had dwelt in marble halls.

"Selim," he said, arising and laying his hand upon his servant's shoulder, his voice unsteady with finality, "I have decided, after all, to go to Paris. We will live there, Selim. Do you understand?" with strange fierceness, a great exultation mastering him. "We are to live in Paris!"

To himself all that night he was saying: "I must see her again! I shall see her!"

A thousand times he had read and reread the letter that Lady Deppingham had written to him just before the ceremony in the cathedral at Thorberg. He knew every word that it contained. He could read it in the dark. She had said that Genevra was going into a hell that no hereafter could surpass in horrors! And that was ages ago, it seemed to him. Genevra had been a wife for nearly three months—the wife of a man she loathed. She was calling in her heart for him to come to her. She was suffering in that unspeakable hell. All this he had come to feel and shudder over in his unspeakable loneliness.

He would go to her. There could be no wrong in loving her, in being near her, in standing by her in those hours of desperation.

A copy of a London newspaper stuffed away in the recesses of his trunk, dated June 29, had come to him by post. It contained the telegraphic details of the brilliant wedding in Thorberg. Every royal family in Europe was represented. The list of noble names seemed endless to him; the flower of the world's aristocracy. How he hated them!

The next morning Selim aroused him from his fitful sleep, bringing the news that a strange vessel had arrived off Aratat. Chase rushed out upon his veranda, overlooking the little harbor.

A long, white, graceful craft was lying in the harbor. He stared long and intently at the trim craft.

"Can I be dreaming?" he muttered, passing his hand over his eyes. "Don't lie to me, Selim! Is it really there?" Then he uttered a loud cry of joy and started off down the slope with the speed of a race horse, shouting in the frenzy of an uncontrollable glee.

It was the Marquis of B.'s white and blue yacht.

Three weeks later Hollingsworth Chase stepped from the deck of the yacht to the pier in Marseilles. The next day he was in Paris, attended by the bewildered and almost useless Selim. An old and valued friend, a campaigner of the wartime days, met him at the Gare de Lyon in response to a telegram.

"I'll tell you the whole story of Japat, Arch, but not until tomorrow," Chase said to him as they drove toward the Ritz. "I arrived yesterday on the Marquis of B.'s yacht, the Cricket. Do you know him? Of course you do. Everybody does. The Cricket was cruising down my way and picked me up—Bowles and me. The captain came a bit out of his way to call at Aratat, but he had orders of some sort from the marquis by cable, I fancy, to stop off for me."

He did not regard it as necessary to tell his correspondent friend that the Cricket had sailed from Marseilles with but one port in view—Aratat. He did not tell him that the Cricket had come with a message to him and that he was answering it in person, as it was intended that he should—a message written six weeks before his arrival in France. There were many things that Chase did not explain to Archibald James.

"You're looking fine, Chase, old man. Did you a lot of good out there. You are as brown as that Arab in the taximeter back there. By Jove, old man, that Persian girl is ripping. You say she's his wife? She's"— Chase broke in upon this far from original estimate of the picturesque Neenah.

"I say, Arch, there's something I want to know before I go to the marquis' this evening. I'm due there with my thanks. He lives in the Boulevard St. Germain—I've got the number all right. Is one likely to find the house full of swells? I'm a bit of a savage just now, and I'm correspondingly timid."

His friend stared at him for a moment.

"I can save you the trouble of going to the marquis," he said. "He and the marchioness are in London at present. Left Paris a month ago."

"What? The house is closed?" in deep anxiety.

"I think not. Servants are all there, I dare say. Their place adjoins the Brabetz palace. The princess is his niece, you know."

"You say the Brabetz palace is next door?" demanded Chase, steadying his voice with an effort.

"Yes—the old Flaurebert mansion. The princess was to have been the social sensation of Paris this year. She's a wonderful beauty, you know."

"Was to have been?"

"She married that rotten Brabetz last June, but of course you never heard of it out there in what's-the-name-of-the-place. You may have heard of his murder, however. His mistress shot him in Brussels"—

"Great God, man!" gasped Chase, clutching his arm in a grip of iron.

"The devil, Chase!" cried the other, amazed. "What's the matter?"

"He's dead? Murdered? How? When? Tell me about it!" cried Chase, his agitation so great that Jamie looked at him in wonder.

"Glad you seem to be interested!"

"I am! Where is she—I mean the princess and the other woman?"

"Cool off, old man. People are staring at you. Brabetz was shot three weeks ago at a hotel in Brussels. He'd been living there for two months, more or less, with the woman." In fact, he left Paris almost immediately after he was married to the Princess Genevra. The gossip is that she wouldn't live with him. She'd found out what sort of a dog he was. They didn't have a honeymoon, and they didn't attempt a bridal tour. Somehow they kept the scandal out of the papers. Well, he hiked out of Paris at the end of a week, just before the 14th. The police had asked the woman to leave town. He followed. Dope fiend, they say. The bride went into seclusion at once. She's never to be seen anywhere. The woman shot him through the head and then took a fine dose of poison. It was a ripping news story. The prominence of the"—

"This was a month ago?" demanded Chase, trying to fix something in his mind. "Then it was after the yacht left Marseilles with orders to pick me up at Aratat."

"What are you talking about? Sure it was, if the yacht left Marseilles six weeks ago. What's that got to do with it?"

"Nothing. Don't mind me, Arch. I'm a bit upset."

"There was talk of a divorce almost before the wedding bells ceased ringing. The grand duke got his eyes opened when it was too late. He repented of the marriage. The princess was obliged to live in Paris for a certain length of time before applying to

I am making a new sleigh with a new kind of cast knee, invented by myself. All other makes of sleighs have two large holes through the runner which makes the runner very weak in the center, where they are most apt to break. My new sleigh has no hole through the runner and it makes the sleigh much stronger and better. I have all sizes now on hand. Before buying, call and see them and get my prices on cutters and sleighs. Wilkinson, as musical director, has arranged a fine program and the Normal class will do the same for the Women's Congress, which will be held in VanPelt hall. The main section will be held at the court house. Grangers are requested to bring Grange Melodies.

The W. C. T. U. meeting last Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. P. D. Campbell, was very interesting and well attended. The Mictron's Contest, being the first one attempted by the union, proved satisfactory and so much so, that probably it will be undertaken again the coming year. Mrs. Bessie Reed was the successful contestant. A bouquet of beautiful carnations was presented her by those having the contest in charge. Two new members were added to the ranks of the W. C. T. U. at the last meeting.

Fine Bird Show Promised.

The eighth annual exhibition of the Northern Michigan Poultry Association will be held at Traverse City, January 25th, 26th, 27th and 28th. Mr. T. M. Campbell of Darlington, Indiana, who has a national reputation as a judge of poultry, has been secured to score the birds. This means that every one of the many exhibitors will not only get a square deal, but will be supplied with definite information regarding the merits of the stock they are keeping.

From present indications, there are reasons for believing that this eighth meeting will exceed its seven predecessors in importance. The association is now well past its beginning days and is thoroughly established as one of the institutions of this part of Michigan. Three years ago, the show held by this association proved to be one of the best of that year. It excelled the Grand Rapids show, both in the number of the birds on exhibition and the quality of the stock. Since then considerable progress has been made in bird raising and it will not be at all strange if the coming exhibition proves to be the best yet held. Efforts are being made to interest all the fancy poultry producers in this half of the state and it is hoped that the best stock from the many local associations will be taken to Traverse City and displayed at the Northern Michigan show.

CHINA'S DEMAND FOR RAILROADS

Wu Tells of Early Prejudice Now Changed to Enthusiasm.

NETWORK OF LINES PREDICTED

Former Chinese Minister and Li Hung Chang Dared Not Even Suggest Railways Once—Remarkable Revolution In Sentiment In Twenty Years.

Wu Ting Fang, the former Chinese minister, who was interviewed at New York a few days before he sailed for China, spoke on the question of railroad building in China and imparted some startling facts.

"China for the Chinese" is, according to Mr. Wu, the motto of the Chinese so far as railroads in their country are concerned, and the fault, he says, lies with Americans. To make this clear he gave a brief history of Chinese railroads.

Li Hung Chang's Strategy.

"Twenty years ago," he said, "Li Hung Chang, whose legal adviser and secretary I was, was the only Chinese statesman who favored the building of railroads in China. He knew that it was useless to try to persuade the Chinese by argument of the advisability of having railroads, but he felt that if they could once see a railroad in operation they would want them all over the empire, where traveling is so difficult that many persons live and die without stirring from their native villages. Li Hung Chang dared not ask the imperial sanction for building the first railroad.

"He got around the difficulty by having me construct a road from a mine to the bank of a river that passed through no towns or villages even, so that no sanction was necessary. This road was ten miles long. People flocked to see it and were so favorably impressed that when Li Hung Chang asked the emperor's permission to extend the road to the city of Tientsin it was granted. All opposition to the railroad among the Chinese died out.

Network of Roads Soon.

"The Chinese now are so strongly in favor of railroads that in a few years the whole country will be covered by a network of them, but they want to do it themselves. As they have neither the money nor the experience the work is progressing much more slowly than it should. But they persist in the 'China for the Chinese' policy.

"Now, I am as loyal and patriotic as any Chinaman, but I recognize the difference between a foreign capitalist like the late Cecil Rhodes and an exploiter, and I hope to make my countrymen see the difference, too, but it will take a lot of diplomacy.

"There is a great future for Chinamen with a knowledge of railroading. I continually advise young men who come from China to study in the United States to take it up, and more and more of them are taking my advice."

GOOD HEARTED FINANCIER.

Instance of H. McK. Twombly's Devotion to His Wife.

Hamilton McK. Twombly, the distinguished lawyer and railroad financier of New York and son-in-law of the late William H. Vanderbilt, has been known among his friends in the highest circles of New York society for a remarkable tenderness of heart. Those whom he loved he loved deeply.

The following story is told of his devotion to his charming wife:

A few years ago, when he had just purchased a wonderful high powered automobile, Mr. Twombly decided to engage a Swiss chauffeur. Before hiring the most likely applicant he had the career of the man investigated from the record of his baptism to the time of his application for the job. He made sure that the man was not only blameless morally, but that he had never been in any sort of accident. A friend who heard of this said to Mr. Twombly, "Why, I never knew that you were such a timid man as all that."

"I am not," replied the financier gravely, "but this chauffeur is to drive my wife in that automobile."

This shows the tender heart of the man, who then turned back to the hard grind of directing the fortunes of the Vanderbilt railroads.

REMINGTON THE ARTIST.

Story of Himself Told by Famous Delineator of Western Life.

Frederic Remington—the artist, writer and sculptor, who died at his home in Ridgefield, Conn., the other day, used to tell his friends that he wanted his epitaph to be "He Knew the Horse." One admirer wrote of him, "He knows a horse from the prick of his ears to the frogs of his feet." Another wrote, "He knows every hair on a pony, and you need only to put Remington the writer and Remington the artist together to make the greatest pony that ever galloped up and down the pages of a book with a cowboy on his back."

Remington, who wrote the history of the great west—wrote it in its raw cologing—was born in Canton, N. Y., Oct. 4, 1861. His first start in life after receiving a common school education was as clerk in an express office. Hearing many stories of the far west, he earned and saved his money and soon was on a ranch, taking his turn as cowboy in rounding up the cattle. Indians were a menace to life as well as property, and Remington made a study of their habits. In addition to many hours passed in the saddle, he found time to perfect himself in drawing and painting, a course of which he had taken in the Yale Art school and Art Students' league, and pictured the redskins as they lived. He first made drawings with pencil and later took up painting. He also was interested in military and treated of scenes of the Spanish-American war.

Remington once told a story of himself that will bear retelling. One of his cowboy acquaintances in the west was known as "Hollering Smith" because of his favorite way of enjoying himself. Remington made a number of studies of him both in repose and at his favorite pursuit, and on returning to New York one time he utilized these in a series of illustrations in a magazine article. The next time he went west and got to Smith's neighborhood Smith came over to see him on the very day of his arrival and, hauling from his pocket a page torn from a magazine with one of Remington's studies of him as the central figure of a group in a state of eruption, inquired, "Say, is that me?"

Fred was cautious, as he said, not being exactly sure of what was next on the program, and replied, "Well, I got the idea from you, of course, but"—

"Oh, it's all right," said Smith, "no offense. If it's me, just say so."

"Well, yes; it's a fairly close portrait of you," said Remington.

"That's what the boys at the ranch said," Smith came back. "I look like that when I holler, do I?"

"I think you do."

"Well," said Smith, tucking the page away in his pocket, "if that's the state of the case then all I've got to say is that Hollerin' Smith has hollered the last holler that he'll ever holler. Hereafter when I celebrate I'll blow a tin horn, you bet. I don't consider that no man has a right to look like that—not around among white folks at least."

Mr. Remington made fifteen bronzes, painted a large number of pictures and wrote several books.

KESSLER'S POLAR DINNER.

Costly Feast at a British Hotel, With Waiters In Bearskins.

George A. Kessler, the New Yorker who gave the famous gondola dinner at the Savoy hotel in London in 1905, celebrated the Yuletide by giving a north pole dinner on Christmas eve at the same hotel. Thirty-three persons sat down at the reputed cost of $300 a head to a feast which was given in the winter garden, transformed for the night into a realistic representation of the north pole. A corps of waiters dressed as Eskimos in furs resembling polar bear skins served the guests. On the back of the menu were a number of original verses by Proctor Smith satirizing Dr. Frederick A. Cook's story of how he reached the pole.

When he was asked what was the occasion of the function Mr. Kessler said, "I did it on the spur of the moment when I learned officially that Cook had not reached the pole."

Besides the dinner each guest received a handsome piece of jewelry at an average cost of $750 a head.

STEEPLE SEARCHLIGHTS.

To Be Used Instead of Chimes In a Brooklyn Church.

The Rev. Dr. James Farrar, pastor of the First Reformed church, at Seventh avenue and Carroll street, Brooklyn, recently had the lofty tower of the church equipped with four strong searchlights pointed north, east, south and west.

The lights will be flashed just previous to and during evening services, and the ringing of the chimes will be discontinued. The lights will be 200 feet above the ground and will be visible from the Narrows.

A rich member of the congregation had the searchlights installed at his own expense.

Sermons by Mail to the Sick.

During the year 1910 the First Congregational church of Oak Park, Ill. will print a sermon once a month for distribution among the sick and elderly and those who are unable to attend the services regularly. It is the desire of the pastor, the Rev. W. E. Bartoff, to keep in touch by this means with the absent members.

Indiana Millionaire's Odd Charity.

Adolph Melzer, millionaire soap manufacturer of Evansville, Ind., is building a large stable, where he will this winter feed the horses of poor people who are too poor to properly care for them.

Edward Payson Weston's Next Walk.

Edward Payson Weston, pedestrian, is planning to start Jan. 29 from Los Angeles, Cal., to walk to New York city. He will follow the line of the Santa Fe railroad as closely as possible to Chicago.

William Ewart Gladstone.

[Born Dec. 29, 1809. Died 1898.]

England, mother of heroes and great men
Unnumbered names thou hast upon thy roll
Of souls illustrious known from pole to pole
And from Suez to distant Darien.
But yet amongst them all what time or when
Has one more worthy fallen to well earned rest
Whose days have made thy millioned empire blest
Than Gladstone, commoner and citizen?

He felt the century's pulses the trend of time,
Stern duty as it shaped from year to year;
Justice and right he held supremely dear.
While mere consistency he counted crime
We, too, his many sided worth discern
And beg to place one wreath above his urn.

In the northwest states, the group which includes Michigan, the number of farms increased but fifteen per cent during the last ten years. But the value of farms has increased 13 per cent and the value of annual farm products has increased 96 per cent. In other words, the northwestern farmer, the Michigan farmer—is advancing with the times. He is progressing with the advance of agricultural methods. The farm that yielded $1,000 is yielding nearer $2,000 in 1910. That Michigan is not a laggard in the splendid group of states in which it is classed is again demonstrated by inventory of what the Wolverine state itself has done. In 1900 Michigan boasted 203,000 farms, while in 1910 it will boast 225,000. But despite this small increase in the number of farms that are being worked, the value of Michigan farms has increased from $800,000,000 1900 to approximately $992,000,000 in 1910; and the annual value of the products of these farms has leaped from $146,000,000 in 1900 to an estimated $203,000,000 in 1910.

The report of the government lake survey for December shows the stage of water for Lake Michigan as 580.08 feet above the tide water, New York. Lake Michigan is 0.05 feet lower than last month, 0.10 lower than a year ago, 2.47 feet below the high stage of December, 1885, and 1.08 feet above the low stage of December, 1895. It probably will fall about 0.02 foot in January.

It is estimated that about 15,000 automobiles owned in the state and as there is a fee of $3 each, and chauffeurs licenses in addition to be paid for, it is expected that the total amount which the state will receive will not be far short of $50,000. The licenses are due now according to the new law in spite of the fact that old licenses say to next May. While the old licenses were $1, the new ones are $3, but the state furnishes the two number plates.

AVOID HARSH DRUGS

Many Cathartics tend to Cause Injury to the Bowels.

If you are subject to constipation, you should avoid strong drugs and cathartics. They only give temporary relief and their reaction is harmful and sometimes more annoying than constipation. They in no way effect a cure and their tendency is to weaken the already weak organs with which they come in contact.

We honestly believe that we have the best constipation treatment ever devised. Our faith in it so strong that we sell it on the positive guarantee that it shall not cost the user a cent if it does not give entire satisfaction and completely remedy constipation. This preparation is called Rexall Orderlies. These are prompt, soothing and most effective in action. They are made of a recent chemical discovery. Their principal ingredient is odorless, tasteless and colorless. Combined with other well known ingredients, long established for their usefulness in the treatment of constipation, it forms a tablet which is eaten just like candy. They may be taken at any time, either day or night, without fear of their causing any inconvenience whatever. They do not gripe, purge nor cause nausea. They act without causing any pains or excessive looseness of the bowels. They are ideal for children, weak, delicate persons and aged people as well as for the most hearty persons.

They come in size packages, 12 tablets 10 cents, 36 tablets 25 cents. Remember you can obtain them only at our store—The Rexall Store. The Ivy Drug Store, A. H. Fleischer, proprietor.

Albion and Columbia.

"Albion, the Gem of the Ocean," was written and composed by Jesse Hammond, an English government clerk of Isled, about 1820 and was heard above all others in the theaters, music halls and on London streets. It is apparent that "gem of the ocean" fits an island more aptly than our large tract of continent, and "borne by the red and the blue" the red of the British army and blue of the navy) is more logical than the meaningless line "borne by the red, white and blue." The lines of the English songs are almost word for word identical with our version, "The Red, White and Blue."—Exchange.

HIS CONVERSION.

A Man Who Did Not Believe In Woman's Standard of Honor.

By KINGSBURY WELCH.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

"Girls," said Miss Spencer at afternoon tea, "what do you suppose I've heard about Harrington? He has openly avowed himself a woman hater. Let's cut him."

"Let's," said Miss Hunter.

"Let's," said every girl in the room but one.

"Are you sure you'll all keep to the agreement?" asked Miss Emerson incredulously.

"What do you take us for?" said Miss Hunter. "You're as bad as Harrington."

"Well, I'll agree," drawled Miss Emerson, "but I don't want any shirking."

"All who agree," said Miss Spencer, "hold up a hand."

Every girl except one held up a fully white hand, with some sort of bangle or bracelet dangling at the wrist. The exception was Miss Emerson.

"Aren't you with us, Emmy?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"I don't believe in judging any one unheard, and I don't believe in conspiracies."

"Very well; do as you please."

That Miss Spencer was determined to keep faith in the matter is proved by the fact that she did not wait for an accidental meeting with the banned man. She brought about one the next day. Harrington was accustomed to walk past her home every morning on his way to his office. She had often stood at a front window purposely to get a bow from him, but after the first he did not deign to see her there. On the morning after he had been hooted ed Miss Spencer went out on the street a short time before his accustomed passing, met him face to face and cut him dead.

HE WAS OBLIGED TO CATCH HER TO PREVENT HER FALLING.

The next morning Harrington walked by the house as indifferently as before. Miss Spencer was watching for him from behind a curtain. For three successive mornings she was at her post and saw the same indifference. Then she wrote a note to Mr. Harrington telling him that she had declined to speak to him because she had heard something about him to his discredit. If he would call on her she would tell him; she didn't wish to do him an injustice.

Harrington called the same evening. Miss Spencer wore her most becoming costume. She was a pretty girl and had never looked prettier. There was no convenient place for him to sit except next her on the sofa. She told him that some one had maligned him; had said he hated women. He replied that he was not in a position to deny the charge, for he had made such a remark a number of times.

"But you didn't mean it," she said. "Don't say you did, for I know you are a gentleman, and none such would attack the weaker sex."

Harrington saw a pair of beautiful blue eyes looking into his. He felt complimented, and he felt drawn toward Miss Spencer.

"The reason why I condemn women," he said, "is because of their standard of honor, which is far beneath that in vogue among men. But I am open to conviction. If within three months you are able to convince me that women are as honorable as men I will renounce my opposition. Meanwhile I shall see you frequently, and we will go out together."

"Agreed," said Miss Spencer.

Harrington kept his word. He called often and invited her to go out with him. She declined his invitations for places of amusement for fear she would be seen by some of the girls with whom she had made the compact. She knew very well what she would say to them when the time came to say it, but the time had not come.

One day Harrington was about to get off a trolley car. A young lady on the platform blocked his way. She was about to step down into the street when Harrington put a hand on her shoulder and held her back. A second later an automobile driven by a drunken chauffeur grazed the trolley car. Had the girl stepped off, as she intended, she would have surely been killed. The auto having passed, Harrington escorted her to the sidewalk. She seemed quite unconcerned till she reached it. Then was all of a tremor. He was obliged to catch her to prevent her falling.

Harrington called a carriage and took her home. Before his departure from her house she had quite recovered and asked him for his address that she might send him some more formal acknowledgment of the obligation than verbal thanks. He gave her his card, at which she stared, stammered something, then bade him good day. She sent him a token of her gratitude—a dozen cambric handkerchiefs with his initials embroidered in the corner by her own hands.

At the time of this episode Harrington had spent two of the three months allotted for his conversion under Miss Spencer's influence and had quite lost his antipathy for women. Indeed, he was beginning to feel that with her for a helpmeet life would assume a rosier hue. He had about made up his mind to tell her so when the trolley car incident occurred. But suddenly Miss Spencer noticed that he was becoming indifferent to her.

The truth is that, being on excellent terms with two women, he was entitled to contrast the one with the other. His trolley car lady appeared friendly, but otherwise indifferent. This revealed to him the fact that Miss Spencer was trying to catch him. The latter redoubled her efforts, but this only tended to make it more apparent and rendered him more appreciative of the girl who on a piquet had to believe left for him only a natural gratitude for having been the accidental cause of saving her life.

And so it happened that the man who had given a woman a chance to prove to him that woman's standard of honor was equal to that of man found himself in an equivocal position. He had gone so far with Miss Spencer that he dared not, if he were not in honor bound to, withdraw. At any rate, he shrank from what he considered a backing out. With the end of the three months he had given Miss Spencer to convert him to the same round she had made the conversion, but he had fallen in love with another girl.

Harrington decided to make a clean breast of it to the girl he loved. He told her that he loved her, but before meeting her had become entangled with another girl. Then he confided to her his affair with Miss Spencer. His confidante manifested no surprise. Indeed, she seemed to be in possession of the whole affair. But she astonished Mr. Harrington by telling him that she could not accept a proposition from him because such a course would place her in an unfortunate position. When he asked her what that position was she declined to inform him on the ground that she could not honorably do so.

Mr. Harrington was astonished. That a woman should decline an offer of marriage on the ground that it would place her in a false position and decline to give that position through motives of honor opened up to him a new thing in the world of morals. He had not been insensible to woman's charms, which he had considered enhanced by their want of a high sense of honor. Here was a woman with charms and scrupulously honorable. He begged her to put him in the way to get the desired information from another, but she said that such a course would be only a subterfuge and no more honorable than telling him herself.

Nevertheless the information came. Miss Spencer was met one day by Miss Hunter walking with Mr. Harrington, and, looking up at him in the fashion often a woman who means to be seductive, Miss Hunter at once invited the members of the cabal to meet at her house the next day at afternoon tea. Miss Emerson, having declined to cut the victim, was not notified. When they were assembled the hostess announced the perfidy of Miss Spencer.

Great was the indignation of the "signatory powers." Miss Wadsworth declared that Mr. Harrington should be saved from the wiles of such a girl, and after much deliberation it was decided to send him an anonymous note stating that for the protection of the sex certain girls had decided to cut him. Miss Spencer having made the proposition. The decision had been unanimous except for one girl. The note having been mailed and tea having been drunk, the girls separated.

When Harrington received the note he took it at once to Miss Spencer, telling her his opinion of women who could write such a note. Miss Spencer showed unmistakable signs of guilt and finally in tears confessed her part in the matter.

"Will you inform me," asked Harrington, "who was the girl who declined to enter upon this conspiracy?"

"Irene Emerson," sobbed the culprit.

"Irene Emerson!"

"Yes. Do you know her?"

"I didn't when this boycott was decided on. I had never seen her. Since then it has been my good fortune to have been the accidental cause of her avoiding a serious accident, and in that way I made her acquaintance. I have been converted to the fact that a standard of honor may be lived up to by persons irrespective of sex, but I regret to have to tell you that my conversion has not come through you, but the girl who, though she had never seen me, declined to join the conspiracy that you instituted. I beg to bid you good day."

Mr. Harrington called on Miss Emerson as soon as he could reach her after leaving Miss Spencer.

"The secret you were too honorable to betray," he said, "has been revealed to me. I have come to thank you for the noble part you have played and for re-establishing in me that reverence for women which all true women deserve."

There are men friends of Harrington—crusty old bachelors—who are mean enough to insinuate that Miss Emerson played a deep game.

the courts for freedom. Gad, I'll stake my head she's happy these days!"

Chase was silent for a long time. He was quite cool and composed when at last he turned to his friend.

"Arch, do me a great favor. Look out for Selim and Neenah. Take 'em to the hotel and see that they get settled. I'll join you this evening. Don't ask questions, but put me down here. I'll take another cab. There's a good fellow. I'll explain soon. I'm—I'm going somewhere here, and I'm in a hurry."

The volante drew up before the historic old pile in the Boulevard St. Germain. Chase's heart was beating ludicrously as he stepped to the curb. The coucher leaned forward for fares.

"I want you for my husband, dearest."

Chase hesitated for a moment, swayed by a momentary indecision.

"Attendre," he said finally. The driver adjusted his register and settled back to wait. Then Chase mounted the steps and lifted the knocker with trembling fingers. He was dizzy with eagerness, cold with uncertainty.

She had asked him to come to her, but conditions were not the same as when she sent the compelling message. There had come into her life a vital break, a change that altered everything. What was it to mean to him?

He stood a moment later in the salon of the old Fleurebert palace, vaguely conscious that the room was darkened by the drawn blinds and that it was cool and sweet to his senses. He knew that she was coming down the broad hallway. He could hear the rustle of her gown.

Inconsequently he was wondering whether she would be dressed in black. Then, to his humiliation, he remembered that he was wearing uncouth, travel soiled garments.

She was dressed in white—a house gown, simple and alluring. There was no suggestion of the coquette, no shadow of grief in her manner as she came swiftly toward him, her hands extended, a glad light in her eyes.

The tall form, voiceless with emotion, clasped her hands to his and looked down into the smiling, rapturous face.

"You came!" she said, almost in a whisper.

"Yes. I could not have stayed away. I have just heard that you—you are free. You must not expect me to offer condolences. It would be sheer hypocrisy. I am glad—I am glad! You sent for me—you sent the yacht, Genevra, before—before you were free. I came knowing that you belonged to another. I find you the same as when I knew you first—when I held you in my arms and heard you say that you loved me. You do not grieve—you do not mourn. You are the same, my Genevra—the same that I have dreamed of and suffered for all these months. Something tells me that you have descended to my plane. I will not kiss you, Genevra, until you have promised to become my wife."

She had not taken her eyes from his white, intense face during this long summing up.

"Hollingsworth, I cannot, I will not blame you for thinking ill of me," she said. "Have I fallen in your eyes? I wanted you to be near me. I wanted you to know that when the courts freed me from that man I would be ready and happy to come to you as your wife. I am not in mourning today, you see. I knew you were coming. As God is my witness, I have no husband to mourn for. He was nothing to me. I want you for my husband, dearest. It was what I meant when I sent out there for you—that and nothing else."

FEEDING PENS FOR CALVES.

Suggestion For One That Can Be Easily Constructed.

It is necessary in raising calves to have a good, serviceable feeding pen. A prominent stockman makes the following suggestion for one that can be constructed easily and cheap: First make four or more little plank troughs of the size desired. Then nail together several boards to make a partition. This should stand higher than a calf and be a little longer. Make five of these partitions, all the same size.

Nail one of the troughs in position in convenient drinking distance for the calf from the floor, against one of the partitions. There should be at least six inch partition standing in front of the trough. Nail the end of the trough against partition. Then nail on another partition and another trough against that until all partitions and troughs are used. There should be a partition on each front end. This provides stalls and troughs for four calves. It may be made larger or smaller if desired. The stalls should be large enough to admit the calves without allowing them to turn around and high enough to prevent stealing or interfering with their neighbors. This arrangement will prevent their sucking each other after eating, as they can be left in the stalls until the milk taste is out of their mouths. It is a good idea to halter-break calves when they are small and easily held.

Remedy For Scours.

A stockman says he has saved several valuable calves that were down with the scours by taking a teacupful of wheat flour and giving a tablespoonful every minute. He repeated this two or three times a day before feeding and diminished the feed one-half until the calf got well.

Takes Snapshots of Microbes.

Before the Paris Academy of Sciences Jean Comandon announced recently the discovery of a new method of photographing bacilli by the combined use of an ultramicroscope and a cinematograph. The discovery is considered of first importance, opening as it does a new field for the study of microbic action.

MONUMENT TO LEW WALLACE

How "Ben-Hur's" Author Will Be Honored In Washington.

GIFT FROM HIS NATIVE STATE

Statue of Famous Soldier and Patriot Heroic In Size, Will Be Unveiled In the Hall of Fame at the Capitol Before a Distinguished Assemblage.

General Lew Wallace, soldier, patriot, statesman, diplomatist and author, is to receive the highest honor in the gift of his native state Indiana and his country when on Jan. 11, next, his effigy in marble will be unveiled in the hall of fame in the capitol at Washington.

More than anything else done by the great author, his work in giving to the world his imperishable "Ben-Hur: A Tale of the Christ," has earned for him this superlative honor. It was President Garfield's gratitude to Wallace for the immortal romance that made him minister plenipotentiary to Turkey—a gratitude which the whole nation shared and which the civilized world echoed, for "Ben-Hur" has been translated into and read in every language used in the known literature of the globe.

Monument of Heroic Size.

Statuary hall in the capitol has become the American hall of fame, for here the several states of the Union honor their greatest men. Indiana in placing General Wallace among them recognizes his services to his country and the heritage of posterity in his written monument, his "Ben-Hur," "Fair God," "Prince of India" and other works from his pen. Each state is allowed two representatives in that wonderful statuary hall. General Wallace will share the place of honor with the war governor of Indiana, Oliver P. Morton.

The statue of General Wallace which will be unveiled is the work of Andrew O'Connor of Paris, one of the best known sculptors in Europe. It is of Carrara marble and of heroic size, being seven feet high. The figure is clad in the uniform of a major general of the United States. The committee which selected the artist to make the statue and to decide on the details of the work was appointed by Governor Hanly, acting under an act of the Indiana legislature.

Many Famous Men Will Attend.

One of the most interesting features of the unveiling of the statue on Jan. 11 will be the presence of the grandsons of General Wallace, Lew and Noble Wallace, sons of Henry L. Wallace. Lew Wallace, Jr., will pull the cord which will disclose the statue. The exercises will be of more than national interest and will enlist the services of many men prominent in the highest circles in the United States.

Midday has been selected as the hour for the ceremony. William Allen Wood will make the presentation, and Governor Tom Marshall, on behalf of the state of Indiana, will respond. Senator Albert J. Beveridge will deliver an address, and the Rev. Dr. Hughey will offer a prayer. A poem written for the occasion will be read by its author, James Whitcomb Riley, a lifelong friend of General Wallace. Both congress and the senate will be represented officially by delegations.

The Indiana society will have a Wallace meeting on the evening of Jan. 11, and several prominent men will make addresses. At this meeting it is expected the survivors of the Eleventh Indiana regiment, which was General Wallace's command in the early part of the civil war, will be present in a body.

The monument of marble in Washington is the concrete and material expression of the monument in the hearts of the grateful thousands who honor and revere the great author of "Ben-Hur."

A Woman's Good Deed.

The book really owes its printed existence to a woman. When General Wallace took his manuscript to New York and gave it to the firm of Harper Bros. it was passed from one to another of the firm's readers, and each of them rejected it as unprofitable. Wallace himself told the story to C. F. Towle, manager of the company which is presenting the dramatization of the romance through the country.

"'Ben-Hur,'" said General Wallace, "came near having an untimely death. James Harper, to whom it was first given to read in manuscript, sent it to the several readers employed by his company, and they each rejected it. Mr. Harper gave as the reason the generally accepted belief by readers and publishers that no religious novel could be made a commercial success. And when he showed me the list of failures in this line it looked as though there was much force in the argument. But I was tenacious, and I kept after him, for my faith in my book grew stronger with opposition. At last he agreed to look over the manuscript himself, and he took it home with him. By some chance his wife read it, and after she had finished it she said to Mr. Harper, 'If you never print another book, print "Ben-Hur."' The next day Mr. Harper ordered the book to press. So, after all, it was a woman who saw clearly the possibilities of the work, while the men who professionally decided on the chances of success had their judgment warped by tradition."

Alcohol and Tobacco and Their Effects on the Body and Mind.

Effects of alcohol on the digestive system: A small dose of alcohol makes the blood flow more to the stomach; digestion is delayed by the action of alcohol on the gastric juice. It also inflames the stomach, and the glands reduce in size, the blood vessels enlarge; sometimes ulcerations occur, hemorrhages, dyspepsia and sometimes death.

The secretion of the bile and the storing of liver sugar can only be carried on in a healthy liver. Alcohol makes great changes in this gland, indigestion, and impairs the whole body. Most all the alcohol taken in the system is absorbed in the stomach, and the blood vessels carry it to the liver, where it does great harm. It makes it fatty and large, and those who drink beer also. It shows that the cells has been filled with globules of fat. These cannot make bile neither can they store liver sugar so it makes the liver unable to do the work it should.

Alcohol is one of the causes of kidney disease especially Bright's disease. In general it makes the cells and tubes in the kidneys diminish in size until they are unfitted to do their work. At least so many tubes becomes useless the urea is not taken from the blood and death occurs. It doesn't take strong drink like alcohol to do it either.

The effect it has on the muscles is simply that it weakens them and turns them to fat.

It lowers the character and effects education in different ways and weakens the mind.

TOBACCO ESSAY

When tobacco is taken the first time it produces these effects: first giddiness, faintness, with a miserable feeling of great weakness and followed by vomiting and relaxation and feebleness of the whole muscular system. The skin becomes moist and pale, and the pulse grows very weak. These effects are felt a couple of days after tobacco is taken. If larger amounts be taken the pain and distress is greater and causes heart failure. Tobacco also stimulates the action of the salivary glands, it leads to a dry, foul condition of the mouth. It also has a very powerful effect on the action of the heart. The nerves which control the action are affected by the nicotine. The throat, mouth and all air passages are greatly affected by tobacco smoke.

Cigarettes affect the nervous system, weakens the will power and destroys the ability of the boy to resist temptation. Boys that use tobacco are easily provoked, cross, unable to work or play with vigor for any length of time. Fathers and mothers are awakening to full knowledge of the physical wrecking which follows, the persistent use of this insidious youth destroyer. If our boys are to be manly men, it will never be by the cigarette route.

It effects the senses on good authority there is no poison that has a greater destroying power upon the sensory nerves than nicotine. It makes the nerves unsteady, dulls the senses, especially the the sight, frequent cause of stunted growth of the young.

It is an extravagent habit and the use of it is selfish, and disregards the rights of others and is likely to lead to the use of alcoholic drinks, and is also a filthy habit.

ALL RECORDS WERE BROKEN

By the Round-Up Institute the First of the Week

OVER SIX HUNDRED WERE PRESENT

Woman's Congress Had an Attendance of Ninety

Every Topic was Earnestly Discussed—All Officers were all Re-elected Two Weeks Asked for Next Year.

The round-up farmers institute opened in time at the court house Monday forenoon with an attendance of fifty-seven. After the introductory remarks by President Mears, Hon. Jason Woodman of Paw Paw presented the subject of "Soil Fertility and How to Maintain it." Mr. Woodman advocated less plowing and keeping of land in pasture at least half of the time. C. H. Hilton of Benton Harbor spoke on the "Orchard and Its Care," which brought out a lively discussion, which was participated in by Messers. Sutton, Staley, Withers, Ingalls, Stacks and others.

After dinner over ninety were present. Mr. Hilton took up the subject of spraying, giving much valuable information on this important subject, which brought out a good discussion. Following this, a round table discussion was had on the subject of "Sugar Beets," Mr. Woodman opening the question. Elmer Ingalls, one of our most successful beet growers, handled the preparing of the land, planting, thinning and cultivating, Nat Burns giving points on harvesting.

At the evening session 250 were present, the court room not being large enough to hold the crowd. Mr. Woodman spoke on the "Farmer and his Son," giving one of the best talks ever heard in this city. Mrs. E. J. Creyts of Lansing spoke on the "Habit of Success," and Mr. Hilton on the "Agricultural College and Its Work." Musical numbers were furnished during this session by the Saunders family, Miss Allcox and Dr. F. H. Wilkinson, under the direction of Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, musical director of the institute, Miss Durance, one of the Normal students read a valuable paper on the subject of "Nitrogen," which demonstrated the work being done in the Normal, in fitting teachers for the rural schools.

Tuesday morning ninty-eight were present when President Mears' gavel fell, Mr. Woodman giving a talk on live stock, also potato culture, both of which were earnestly discussed. After dinner over one hundred were present, Mr. Edmonds of Hastings talking on the "Dairy Barn and the Silo." This was one of the most valuable subjects presented, judging by the questions it brought out. County Commissioner of Schools Milford gave a short talk on "Teaching Agriculture in Rural Schools." This was one of the best talks of the meeting and general regret was felt over the fact that the time which Mr. Milford had was limited so he had to just lightly talk on the subject. Mr. Edmonds closed the institute by a talk on "Alfalfa."

The business meeting resulted in the re-election of the old officers, E. S. Stacks of this city was a strong candidate for the presidency, it taking three ballots to decide the election. The officers were instructed to request Superintendent Talt for two weeks' work in the county next year. A resolution of thanks was also given Mr. VanPelt for the use of his hall where the Women's Congress was held.

At the Woman's Congress held Monday afternoon, the attendance was ninety, Mrs. Creyts conductor. Mrs. Josephine Ingalls of Marion was chosen president and Mrs. McGeagh, of this city secretary. The Normal class took an active part in this meeting as well as in the main section. Misses Burnett and McCollum of the class furnished music the last half day. Walter Black of Marion also sang at the last meeting.

This Institute in point of attendance and interest shown, sets a new mark for Institutes in Northern Michigan and was another strong piece of evidence that Charlevoix citizens are awakening to the grand agricultural possibilities of this region.

Next week we will publish a more extended account of the Woman's Congress.

MUST HAVE STAMPS

No More Pennies Will be Taken from Rural Mail Boxes.

Estimates made by officials of the postoffice department indicate that approximately 300,000,000 one cent pieces annually are taken by the rural letter carriers from letter boxes for the payment of postage on mail matter deposited.

Complaints against the practice have become so widespread that the post-office department has issued instructions to all postmasters of rural delivery offices that after February 1 the practice would be discontinued. The department, it explained, has been forced to adopt this measure on account of the delays in the collection and delivery of mail.

Lectured on His Favorite Reform

Judge F. W. Mayne of this judicial district, gave a lecture in the Congregational church Monday evening on the subject of "The law and the law breaker," before a good sized audience. The principal part of his discourse was devoted to his pet fad of probation, which is all right so far as the first offense of youthful offenders is concerned, but all wrong when he extends clemency to notorious violators of the law. The judge stated there had been more crime in the district during the past year than for the five years previous, and this fact taken with his admission that he tried his probation plan on one-fourth of the convictions before him, ought to be evidence sufficient that his system is not a perfect success.—Mancelona Herald

THE WESTERN MICHIGAN EXHIBIT

One of the great attractions at the United States Land and Irrigation Exposition held in Chicago during the latter part of 1909 was the Western Michigan exhibit, which exhibit was the work of the Western Michigan Development Bureau. This exhibit at a single stroke established Western Michigan's claim to the slogan, "Fruit With Flavor." It also settled once for all time every doubt regarding the importance of Western Michigan as an agricultural region.

He pleases and interests the people as he speaks, cramming art and wisdom in a very happy and forceful way, and always gives them something to carry away with them.

Note what others say of him, "Supplied enough inspiration to stimulate an earnest effort for success in everyone of his 400 listners." There was no disappointment and it was his fifth lecture here, and it is safe to predict it will not be his last."

TO OUR FRIENDS

In our great loss of our dear mother being taken away from us so suddenly by death, hundreds of friends and customers will miss her from the store, as she was so well known and liked by everybody, because she always had something pleasant to say to everyone that came in contact with her.

As we intend to continue the business, so well established by our late mother, and which grew so popular with the public as the trading center of Charlevoix, we wish to say that we will do all in our power to live up to the business rules laid out by our late mother and follow them to the end, and we are convinced that it will be a success in business as we have always enjoyed good patronage in the past.

We hope that the people will continue to make this store their trading place and we will do all we can to make everything pleasant for our customers, and making their purchasing a pleasure here.

Very truly,

CHARLEVOIX WINS FIRST GAME

Which Was Played Here Friday Night

SCORE WAS TWENTY-TWO TO SIXTEEN

Bellaire Kept the Locals Going all the Time.

Will Meet the Strong Boyne City Team Friday Night. Charlevoix City Band Will Furnish Music.

Friday evening was a night of rejoicing among the Charlevoix high school students, when they defeated Bellaire in a well fought game of basket ball. This was the first game Charlevoix has ever witnessed and was the second game the school team has played. Much interest is manifested by the students and those who play are only the ones who held good standings in their school work. Each member of the team has the making of a good player with more practice. The boys take the situations cooly and with Wallace, the ever ready left guard, can defeat many of the school teams without much trouble. H. Jacobs is the candidate for a star in fielding the basket. Durgan at center is good with his reach. Paddock and Kirby are promising players in their respective positions.

The Bellaire boys put forth a good and clean game of ball, each member taking his position with the vim that will make the other fellows sit up and take notice. Bellaire has had a team for several years and have the advantage over Charlevoix for quickness in many plays. L. Wright at the center position shows a good reach and speed. Bechtold at left forward has accumulated a coolness which will win him many good points in fielding baskets. The other members on the Bellaire team have their good qualities in playing their positions.

The following is the line up on both teams with positions.

Charlevoix	Position	Bellaire
H. Jacobs	right forward	S. Mosher
H. Paddock	left forward	H. Brechtold, C.
G. Durgan	center	L. Right
J. Kirby	right guard	W. Maltby
H. Wallace	left guard	F. Mestiner

Substitutes—A. Al. Thomwood, L. Crane and W. Mitchell for Charlevoix. A. Carr and L. Mayne for Bellaire.

The game is as follows with the plays as were made during the twenty minute halves:

FIRST HALF

Bellaire center hits ball to their territory and Charlevoix passes the ball to their end of the field and Jacobs neatly shoots the ball to the basket for two points. Wallace was out of the game for a slight injury. Time called and Charlevoix carries ball to their field and by a foul of three men by Bellaire, Jacobs for Charlevoix shoots for the basket at eighteen feet. Bellaire covers the ball and Bechtold makes a field basket for two points Charlevoix in turn takes the next field basket for two points and by a foul Bellaire makes a basket for one point. In the following scrummages there were several fouls called and Charlevoix made two baskets on the foul line. Wright for Bellaire, fielded basket for two points. Durgan fields a basket with two more points only to be followed by Wright for Bellaire with the same count. Charlevoix fouls and Bechtold makes a basket of one point followed by a scrummage and field basket by Paddock for Charlevoix. Time is called. Score 10 to 8, Charlevoix's favor.

SECOND HALF

Bellaire covers the ball and Charlevoix fouls to Bellaire with Bechtold scoring basket at one point. Bechtold then fields a basket for two points. Charlevoix gets nervous and fouls Bellaire, and Bechtold again gets a one point Basket. Charlevoix recovers the ball and Bellaire fouls. Jacobs scores a one point basket. Charlevoix forces hard fielding and Jacobs fields three baskets giving Charlevoix six additional points. Charlevoix holds ball in their territory and with six or seven unsuccessful attempts at the basket by the players Paddock at last recovers the ball and fields a two point basket. Bellaire weakens and Wallace at guard was there when

THEY GROW HAIR

Certain Ingredients if Properly Combined, Stimulate Human Hair Growth.

Resorcin is one of the most effective germ destroyers ever discovered. Beta-naphthol is a most powerful, yet absolutely safe germicide and antiseptic, which prevents development of germ matter, and creates a clean healthy condition.

Pilocarpine, although not a coloring matter or dye, is an ingredient well established for its power to restore natural color to human hair. Borax, because of its well-known softening and cleansing properties is most useful in the treatment of scalp and hair diseases. Glycerine acts as a stimulant to the hair bulbs, and has a soothing, healing and nourishing influence. Alcohol is indispensable in medicine because of its antiseptic, stimulating and preservative qualities.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is skilfully compounded of these ingredients which are compounded in a peculiar base, and we believe it is the most effective remedy known to medical science for scalp and hair troubles generally. We personally guarantee it to stop the dandruff and scalp irritations, and to grow hair, even though the scalp does not seem to be dead, provided the hair roots are not entirely destroyed. It stops falling hair at once, and will grow hair on bald heads, except in cases of old age, where the hair roots are entirely dead. It is a most delightful hair dressing, and keeps the hair soft and pliable. It is not sticky or greasy, and does not gum the hair or make it fall out. It is the most elegant hair tonic we know of, and we unhesitatingly recommend it to all who are troubled with dandruff, itching scalp, falling hair, or who want to grow hair.

We want every one troubled with scalp disease, dandruff or loss of hair to try Rexall "93" Hair Tonic. It allows not remove dandruff, and promote a growth of hair to the satisfaction of the user, we will without question or quibble return every cent paid us for it. This guarantee is printed on every package. It has effected most satisfactory results in 93 out of 100 cases where sent to a practical test.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is entirely unlike and in every particular different from anything else we know of for the purpose for which it is recommended. We urge you to try it at our entire risk. Certainly we could offer no better guarantee. Two sizes, 50 cents, and $1.00. Sold in Charlevoix only at our store—The Rexall Store. The Ivy Drug Store, A. B. Fleischer, proprietor.

Clothing In Asia Minor.

There is a belief prevalent among the natives of Asia Minor that the thicker the clothing worn at all seasons of the year the better it is for the human body, protecting it alike from the winter cold and the summer heat. In Caucasia it is not uncommon to see people wearing huge furs in coats in the midst of summer, with the thermometer standing at 100 degrees.

HOW TO BARREL APPLES.

Grower Gives Suggestions on Packing and Heading.

There's an art in knowing how to grade and pack a barrel of apples, and the heading of the barrel is not the least thing about the job. On this topic an experienced apple grower, S. B. Shaw of Randolph county, N. C., offers these valuable suggestions:

Before beginning to pack see that the barrel is resting on a solid base. If packing in the orchard provide planks or boards on which to place the barrels while being filled. This keeps the head of the barrel clean and enables the packer to "rack" it to better advantage. "Racking" is the shaking of the barrel from time to time during the packing in order to settle the apples, thus making them fit firmer and closer together. The head or end that is usually opened upon reaching market is placed at the bottom end in filling.

Before starting to pack put in a corrugated apple barrel cap or two or three layers of nicely folded white or plain brown paper. This not only keeps the fruit in better shape, but prevents it from bruising. When this is done the barrel is ready to be "faced." This consists of placing by hand from two to three tiers of fruit, stem end down. After "facing" the apples are correctly poured in and the barrel frequently shaken until it is almost full. The last two or three rows may be placed by hand, stem end up, thus "facing" both ends of the package.

The last layer of fruit should project about one inch above the chime of the barrel and be covered either with a corrugated apple or pasteboard cap or with two or three layers of nicely folded paper as used in the other end.

The head is then put on and forced into place with an apple barrel press. There are several types of these presses in use, suitable for the one I have described, but all answering the same purpose. After nailing the head in place [illegible] all laps are securely [illegible] their proper positions before the barrel, and it is ready for market.

In packing apples see that each package is as near filled with the same throughout, including top, middle and bottom. Put up a strictly first class, honest pack or else put the fruit at home. "Honesty is the best policy" and the only one that pays in the fruit business.

THE BEST APPLES.

Some Varieties Well Recognize as Old Favorites in This List.

Now [illegible] professor of horticulture of the Ohio agricultural experiment station, has selected the following list of apples for the state of Ohio, but [illegible] Michigan and Wisconsin. To have planted from the varieties mentioned the following list of apples are recommended. The first [illegible] these varieties. To this list may be added the Arkansas Black, Arkansas, Ben Hur, Black Ben Davis, Delaware Red, Grimes' Golden, Hubbardston Nonesuch, Jonathan, Lowell, Missouri Pippin, Northern Spy, Rome Beauty, Stayman's Winesap, Twenty Ounce, Wagener and Winter Banana. Of the varieties raised in the east the Winesap seems to keep better without being put in cold storage and really reaches the full perfection of flavor only late in the winter or in the early spring. It used to be considered a marvelous feat almost an impossible thing to keep apples over from the fall till the next summer apples appeared but with cold storage and scientific methods as they are now this is easily achieved and with far less danger [illegible] than formerly [illegible] subject to be kept [illegible]

The Riverman

Copyright, 1903, by the McClure Company. Copyright, 1907, 1908, by Stewart Edward White

By Stewart Edward White

When a rough, sturdy, man-mastering lumber driver, born of the lawless "river jacks," sues out to win the heart and hand of an aristocratic young woman of eastern wealth and fashion, interesting things are apt to happen. They do happen, as readers of this story will agree. Jack Orde is the type of man who has gone into the American wildernesses and reclaimed them from themselves, from lawbreaking and debauchery. The brilliant author's descriptions of the battles between man and nature and between man and man in the lumber fastnesses of the great northwest set one's blood a-tingle. They show that man is superman when courage swells his heart. And the wooing and winning of Carroll Bishop by Jack Orde supply captivating romance that cannot fail to charm.

Chapter 1

THE time was the year 1872 and the place a bend in the river above a long pond terminating in a dam. Beyond this dam and on a flat lower than it stood a two story mill structure. A crew of lumbermen lounged about two fires at the upper end of the pond—idle because of the strong adverse wind and the unexpected weakness of the current, which had arrested the progress of their thousands of logs. Suddenly a solitary figure appeared around a river bend. This progress was jerky and on an uneven zigzag, according as the logs lay, by leaps, short runs, brief pauses, as a riverman goes. Finally he stepped ashore just below the camp, stamped his feet vigorously free of water and approached the group around the cooking fire.

The newcomer was a man somewhere about thirty years of age, squarely built, big of bone, compact in bulk. His face was burly, jolly and reddened rather than tanned by long exposure. A pair of twinkling blue eyes and a humorously quirked mouth redeemed his countenance from commonplaceness. "Well, boys," he remarked at last in a rollicking big voice, "I'm glad to see the situation hasn't spoiled your appetites."

Tom North, in charge of the lumbermen, rose. He and the newcomer, who was Jack Orde, his principal, sauntered to the water's edge, where they stood for a minute looking at the logs and the rutted expanse of water below. "It's a pity that old mossback had to put in a mill," said Orde. "The water was slack enough before, but now there seems to be no current at all."

"Case of wait for the wind," agreed Tom North. "Old Daly will be red-headed. He must be about out of logs at the mill, and I expect Johnson's drive will be down on our rear most any time."

"It's there already. Let's go take a look," suggested Orde.

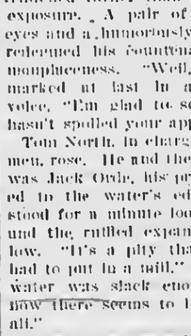
They picked their way around the edge of the pond to the site of the new mill.

"Sluice open all right," commented Orde.

Orde walked out on the structure and looked down on the smooth water rushing through.

"Ought to make a draw," he reflected. Then he laughed. "Tom, look here," he called. "Climb down and take a squint at this."

The sluice, instead of building at the natural channel of the river, had been built a good six feet above that level; so that, even with the gates wide open, a "head" of six feet was retained in the slack water of the pond.



"You haven't been square," said Orde.

"No wonder—we couldn't get a draw," said Orde. "Let's hunt up old What's-his-name and have a powwow."

"His name is plain Reed," explained North. "There he comes now."

The owner of the dam dapped into view as a lank and lengthy white haired individual dressed in loose, loug clothes and wearing atop a battered old plug hat.

"You haven't been square," said Orde. "You aren't letting us get our logs out."

"How so?" snapped the owner, his thin lips tightening.

"That sluice is a good six foot too high."

"Is that so?" cried the old man excitedly. "Well, I'm giving you all the law gives you, and that's the natural flow of the river, and not a thing more will you get."

Somewhat astonished at this outbreak, the two rivermen stood for a moment staring at the old man. Then a steely glint crept into Orde's frank, blue eye and the corners of his mouth tightened.

"We won't do trouble with you, Mr. Reed," said Orde. "But this is the only dam on the river with sluices built up that way and I do know that we'll never get those logs out if we don't get more draw on the water. Good day."

Followed by the reluctant North, he walked away.

Chapter 2

THE next morning daybreak clear and breathless. As soon as the wind died the logs had begun to drift slowly out into the open water. The surface of the pond was covered with the scattered timbers floating idly. After a few moments the clank of the bars and ratchet was heard as two of the men raised the heavy sluice gate on the dam.

Four more had by this time joined the two men who had raised the gate, and all together, armed with long pike poles, walked out on the framed sloped booms that should concentrate the logs into the chute. Here they prodded forward the few timbers within reach and waited patiently for more.

Jack Orde wandered back and forth over the work, his hands clasped behind his back, a short pipe clinched between his teeth. To the edge of the drive he rolled the logs, then took to the bank and strolled down to the dam. Meeting Tom North's troubled glance, he grinned broadly.

"Told you we'd have Johnson on our necks," he remarked, jerking his thumb up river toward a rapidly approaching figure.

This soon defined itself as a tall individual with a choleric blue eye.

"What in hades is the matter here?" he yelled. "We're right at your rear.

"By your own folly shall ye perish."

and you ain't even made a start getting through this dam! We'll lose the water next!"

"Keep your shirt on," advised Orde. "If you want those logs pushed any faster, do it yourself."

"If you can't get out logs, why do you take the job?" roared Johnson. "If you hang up my drive, blank you, you'll catch it for damages! I tell you our mills need logs, and, what's more, they're a-goin' to git them!"

He departed in a rumble of vituperation.

Orde found the old mill owner occupying a chair tilted back against the wall of the building. His ruffled plug hat was thrust, as usual, well away from his high and narrow forehead. He was whittling a pine stick, which he held pointing down between his spread knees, and conversing animatedly with a young fellow occupying another chair at his side.

"I want to talk this matter over," Orde began. "We can't afford to hang up the drive, and the water is going down every day. We've got to have more water. I'll tell you what we'll do: If you'll let us cut down the new sill we'll replace it in good shape when we get all our logs through."

"No, sir!"

"Well, we'll give you something for the privilege. What do you think is fair?"

"I tell you I'll give you your legal rights and not a cent more," replied the old man.

"Well, Mr. Reed, stop and think what this means," returned Orde. "No logs means no lumber. That is bankruptcy for a good many who have contracts to fulfill. And no logs means the mills must close. Thousands of men will be thrown out of their jobs, and a good many of them will go hungry. And with the stream full of the old cutting that means less to do next winter in the woods—more men thrown out. Getting out a season's cut with the flood water is a pretty serious matter to a great many people, and if you insist on holding us up here in this slack water the situation will soon become alarming."

The old man brought to earth the front legs of his chair with a thump.

"And if the whole kit and caboodle of ye starved outright," said he, "it would but be the fulfillin' of the word of the prophet who says: 'So will I send upon you famine and evil beasts, and they shall bereave thee, and pestilence and blood shall pass through thee, and I will bring the sword upon thee, I the Lord have spoken it!' And don't forget that. Ye that make of God's smilin' land waste places and a wilderness by your own folly shall ye perish."

Orde whirled on his heel.

The young man, who sat an interested spectator, arose and joined him. He was a very slender young man, with a shrewd, thin face, steel gray eyes.

"Wait a minute," said the young fellow. "Have you any objections to my hanging around a little to watch the work? My name is Newmark—Joseph Newmark. I'm out in this country a good deal for my health. This thing interests me."

"Sure," replied Orde, puzzled. "Look all you want to. The scenery's free."

"Yes. But can you pull me up?"

"Oh, as far as I'm concerned," agreed Orde heartily. "But," with one of his contagious chuckles, "I'm only river boss. You'll have to fix it up with the doctor—the cook, I mean," he explained, as Newmark looked puzzled. "You'll find him at camp."

In the center of the stream the work had been gradually slowing down to a standstill with the subsidence of the first rush of water after the sluice gate was opened. Tom North, leaning gracefully against the shaft of a peavy, looked up eagerly as Orde approached.

"Is it peace or war?"

"War," replied Orde briefly.

Chapter 3

AT this moment the cook stepped into view and sent across the water a long, weird and not unmusical cry. The men at once began slowly to drift in the direction of the camp. There, when the tin plates had all been filled, Orde addressed them.

"Boys," said he, "the old mossback has built up the sill of that gate until we can't get a draw on the water, and he refuses to give, lend or sell us the right to cut her out. Now, we've got to get those logs out. Johnny Sims, what's the answer?"

"Cut her out," grinned Sims.

"Correct, replied Orde, with a chuckle. "But it's against the law to interfere with another man's property."

This was so obviously humorous in intent that the only reception consisted of more grins from everybody.

"The nearest sheriff's at Spruce Rapid," commented some one philosophically.

"We have sixty men, all told," said Orde. "We ought to be able to carry it through."

He lifted his plate and walked across to a vacant place. Here he found himself next to Newmark.

"Hello!" he greeted that young man. "Fixed it with the doctor all right?"

"Yes," replied Newmark, "thanks. I think I ought to tell you that the sheriff is not at Spruce Rapids, but at the village expecting trouble."

Orde roared in delight.

"Boys," he called, "old Plug Hat's got the sheriff right handy. Has he a posse?" inquired Orde of Newmark.

"I didn't see any, but I heard that the governor had been advised to hold troops in readiness."

At last Orde's face cleared, and he slapped down his tin plate violently.

"I have it!" he cried aloud.

He instructed a half dozen men to provide themselves with saws, axes, picks and shovels and march toward the mill.

When near the structure the riverman saw the lank, black figure of the mill owner mount a bony old horse and clatter away into the forest.

Orde rapidly designated ten men of his crew. "You make things hum. Get as much done as you can before the sheriff comes, and when that sheriff comes I want you to go peaceably. Understand?"

"Cave in? Not much!" cried Purdy.

"See here," and Orde drew them aside in earnest conversation. When he had finished he clapped each of them on the back, and all moved off, laughing, to the dam.

"Now, boys," he commanded the others, "no row without orders. If there's going to be a fight I'll give the word."

The chopping crew descended to the bottom of the sluice, the gate of which had been shut, and began immediately to chop away at the apron.

The work had continued nearly an hour when Orde commanded the fifty or more idlers back to camp.

"The sheriff will be here pretty quick now."

"And leave them to fight alone? Guess not," grumbled a tall, burly individual.

"Am I bossing this drive?" demanded Orde.

The riverman growled.

Sinuck, sinuck, sounded Orde's fists and the man went down in a heap, but immediately rebounded to his feet. Orde seized a peavy and stood with the murderous weapon upraised.

"Lie down, you hound, or I'll brain you!" he roared at the top of his great voice.

The man crouched, breathless.

"March!" commanded Orde. "You're through."

The man sullenly arose and slouched away.

The other men turned to the trail, leaving the ten at the sluice. When within the fringe of the brush Orde called a halt.

"Now, boys," he commanded, "squat down and lay low. If fight would do any good you know mighty well I'd fight. And the boys won't be in jail any longer than it takes to get a wire to Daly to bail them out. Smoke up and don't bother."

They filled their pipes and settled down to an enjoyment of the situation.

A half hour elapsed before the situation developed further. Then Tom North's friend Jim, who had gathered his long figure on the top of a stump, unclasped his knees and remarked that old Plug Hat was back.

The men peered cautiously through the brush. They saw Reed, accompanied by the sheriff, approach the dam. The working crew stacked their tools, resumed their jackets and departed with the sheriff.

YOU PROVE IT!

An invitation to all owners of cylinder machines—Columbia and others.

We could argue the quality of Columbia Indestructible Cylinder Records until a year from now but what good would it do if you could not prove it for yourself by coming into our store and seeing and hearing it? We could print a whole newspaper every day about the special and original Columbia processes of manufacture and not nowhere at all if the Records did not bear the evidence.

won't break, no matter how roughly they are used, they won't wear out, no matter how often they are played. Moreover, their tone is far purer, clearer, more brilliant than that of any other cylinder record made. Don't merely take our word for it—come inside our store and listen. Cost 35 cents!

Bran New Stock of Cutters and Sleighs on Hand

I am making a new sleigh with a new kind of cast knee, invented by myself. All other makes of sleighs have two large holes through the runner which makes the runner very weak in the center, where they are most apt to break. My new sleigh has no hole through the runner and it makes the sleigh much stronger and better. I have all sizes now on hand. Before buying, call and see them and get my prices on cutters and sleighs. I also handle all kinds of farm implements. I have the agency for the Superior drill, the best drill ever sold in Charlevoix. Remember the old stand. First-class horseshoeing and general repairing.

needed and successfully fielded a two point basket. Bellaire gets the ball but fouls Charlevoix again and Jacobs scores one more point. Time called with the score for the game 22 to 16, a good victory for the Charlevoix boys in the first game in the city.

Both teams are in need of practice and have the foundations of being strong opponents. Prof. Claude Miller acted as referee, Superintendent DeVoe was time keeper and D. Wilson as scoreman. Charlevoix will play Bellaire at Bellaire on Friday evening, February 11.

Friday evening the Boyne City high school team will play the the local high school team at the Charlevoix theater. Boyne City is coming with a fast team and it is the ambition of our local team to boldly embrace the situation, thus sending Boyne City back to their homes with the clutch of defeat clinging at their coats. The Charlevoix City Band will play before the game which will begin promptly at eight o'clock and will be out so that you can attend the dance early. The boys need your assistance and solicit your hearty support, both financially and on the bleacher list. The Charlevoix school and the faculty should be encouraged in athletics and your patronage will show your appreciation of their efforts.

"Drop In Any Time."

One of the pitfalls of friendship is the standing invitation. It is easy and pleasant to say: "Come whenever you like, my dear! We shall be delighted to see you at any time; don't stand on ceremony—come whenever you are this way." But let those who receive such invitations beware. It stands to reason that an unexpected visit cannot always be convenient—the hostess is in the midst of something or other and "not fit to be seen," or her husband has rushed home to take her out somewhere, and she would rather go than stay at home and entertain her dearest friend, or the luncheon or the dinner is a makeshift very nice, so far as the family is concerned, but not exactly suitable to set before visitors. The hostess tries to be nice, but can't help showing her vexation or embarrassment. The guest perceives something indefinable in the atmosphere and is accordingly constrained, and every one is uncomfortable. Yet people still go on giving and accepting standing invitations.—New York Tribune.

SATOLLI'S HONORS.

Distinguished Prelate First Apostolic Delegate to the United States.

Cardinal Satolli, the distinguished prelate of the Roman Catholic church, was born in Marsciano, archbishopric of Perugia, July 21, 1839. His family was a noble one of very ancient lineage.

His success in difficult research first won for him the regard of his great friend, the late Pope Leo.

Completing his studies, Satolli was assigned to the faculty of the College of the Propaganda and in an unusually short time became professor of theology and philosophy. The work of teaching and the opportunity for study and research appealed strongly to Satolli, and if he had been guided alone by his own inclinations he would have preferred to remain a teacher, but the church had need of him outside of the class room, and after a few years he was made archbishop of Lepanto and then sent to America by Pope Leo XIII. to represent the Vatican at the Columbia exposition.

He remained as the first apostolic delegate to the United States. The clerical work connected with the administration of the church in America had heretofore been in charge of the propaganda, which has superintendence of all missionary countries. When the Catholic body in a missionary country is of a size to warrant the change the propaganda hands over the powers and duties to that body itself. If the prelate's treaty relations with the particular country, as in France, a nuncio from Rome resides at the capital, but where no treaty relations exist, as in the United States, the pontiff is represented by a delegation, such as Mgr. Satolli established at Washington.

Just before coming to Washington Archbishop Satolli had been made president of the Academy of Noble Ecclesiastics, one of the greatest positions in the ecclesiastical world of Italy and of the Roman Catholic church. On the heels of this great honor came the appointment of Satolli as apostolic delegate to the United States, and only a comparatively short time after this came the news that Satolli was to be made a cardinal.

He was duly created and proclaimed cardinal Nov. 29, 1885, taking title from St. Maria in Araceli. After the red hat had been conferred upon him Cardinal Satolli became prefect of the Sacred College of Studies and a member of the Congregation of the Propaganda, Oriental Rites and Index.

Among all the offices held by Cardinal Satolli in his long ecclesiastical career the one he recalls with the greatest satisfaction is that of apostolic delegate at Washington. A title not conferred on him by the church, but one which is said to please him very much, is that of the "American cardinal." This title was bestowed on him because of his intense and sincere love for the United States.

MUSEUM WHERE CARSON DIED

Daughters of American Revolution to Honor His Memory.

Work of restoring the ancient, tumbledown building at old Fort Lyons, Colo., now the United States naval sanitarium, where Kit Carson, greatest of western scouts, died, has been commenced, and within the next few months it will be turned over to the Daughters of the American Revolution of Colorado for a museum.

The restoration will bring it back to its original condition in practically every detail and give to the state one of the most historic landmarks which it possesses.

It is now in use, warped and weather beaten, but in such condition that it can easily be restored. It stands almost in the center of the big group of buildings at the naval sanitarium.

It is quite likely that when the restoration is completed it will be dedicated with appropriate ceremony by the Daughters. Already an effort is on foot to collect relics of Carson's day for the museum, and the Daughters hope to have a well equipped and fireproof house to be used as a museum.

On the site of the old stone building was the regimental headquarters of the fort, and it is said has been taken there from his home at Boggsville several miles from Lyons, a very sick man. The only person with him when he died were Dr. Tatom, medical officer of the post, First Sergeant Lake Cahill and a hospital steward whose name is now forgotten, and of this trio the only one living is Lake Cahill, a resident of Las Animas, Colo.

MISSISSIPPI'S NEW SENATOR

Strange Story Told About Colonel James Gordon's War Record.

Sought at one time by the federal authorities under a $10,000 reward for his capture, dead or alive, for his alleged part in the conspiracy that resulted in the murder of a president of the United States and now appointed as a member of the highest legislative body of that country is the strange experience of Colonel James Gordon of Okolona, Miss., who has been named senator by Governor Noel of Mississippi as successor to the late Senator A. J. McLaurin.

Mr. Gordon was one of several Confederate leaders suspected of being in conspiracy with J. Wilkes Booth to kill President Abraham Lincoln. He escaped arrest and probably death only by the intervention, it is stated, of a Yankee colonel with whom he had crossed swords in a fight in Virginia.

During the earlier years of the war Colonel Gordon had formed an intimate friendship with Booth, and after the assassination of President Lincoln the reward of $10,000 was offered for his capture. Colonel Gordon went to Canada, and it was several months after the close of hostilities before he found it safe to return home.

During one of the campaigns in Virginia Colonel Gordon had crossed swords with the colonel of a New York cavalry regiment. Both were wounded in the conflict, but they afterward became fast friends.

Colonel Gordon wrote a letter to this New Yorker, denying that he had any part in the conspiracy and stating that he desired to return home. The former took the matter up with General Dix, then in command of the army forces in New York, and the latter sent him a passport and an invitation to come to New York and surrender, which he did. He afterward satisfied General Dix that he knew nothing of the Lincoln conspiracy.

He took the oath of allegiance and returned to his home in Chickasaw county, where he has since resided.—Memphis News Scimitar.

Bad to Worse.

A gentleman was admiring his pigeons the other afternoon when he heard a crash, a "whoop" and saw one of his cots drop from a window sill to the ground.

Turning round, the gentleman was just in time to see a small boy in the lane drop a catapult and run.

After a short chase the culprit was run in.

"You young scoundrel!" ejaculated the angry owner of the pigeon. "What do you mean by coming and shooting my birds?"

"Please, sir, I didn't mean to do it," whined the captive. "I—I didn't shoot at the pigeon."

"Come, come," said the gentleman, "don't make matters worse. I saw the bird fall, and if you did not aim at it how came you to hit it?"

"Please, sir," blubbered the boy, "the pigeon got in the way. I—I was aiming at the wluder."—London Tit-Bits.

A CABBAGE SNAKE QUERY.

A lady reader of these notes living near Massillon, O., writes making inquiry if there is any ground for the impression existing in some localities that the cabbage snake or worm is poisonous, or, rather, if cabbages inhabited by them are so. She having found one twelve inches long coiled up in a bunch about as large as a hickorynut. There was quite a stir over this matter three or four years ago, and enough was published in the papers so that the cabbage growers of the country lost many thousands of dollars. With a view to getting at the truth about the matter the agricultural department at Washington made a thorough investigation at the time and reported that there was no connection and could be no connection whatever between the presence of the big white worms in cabbages and the illness or death of persons eating them. The probabilities are that if deaths ever did occur from eating cabbage they were due rather to the fact that the cabbages had been sprinkled with paris green after they had begun to head or were stale when eaten, ptomaine poisoning resulting from the process of decay which had already set in. It is true that the mere idea of one of these snakes being in a cabbage and being boiled up with it is calculated to upset one's stomach, but that it produces a poison is entirely beyond the range of possibility. If our inquirer is of an investigating turn of mind she may demonstrate the truth of the above claims by boiling the snake up in some milk and feeding it to a kitten. Should there be any truth whatever in the poison theory the kitten will show the effects of it. If the kitten is not affected it is safe to conclude that a child or grown person would not be.

A SEVERE CRITICISM.

There has been much criticism recently of the method which is followed by the government in the disposal of public lands, which requires the would be homesteader to travel hundreds or thousands of miles to register for a drawing when hardly one person in 500 can possibly be successful. One of the severest critics of this system in vogue is President Hill of the Great Northern road, which has been benefited to the extent of millions of dollars in car fare through the transportation of folks to these land drawings. In speaking of the Flathead Indian reservation drawing in western Montana, Mr. Hill says that less than 2 per cent of the people who registered had a chance to draw any land at all, while a good share of the claims which were thrown open to entry were well nigh worthless. He concludes: "I have met lots of people who gave up good positions in the east and went out there, only to be bitterly disappointed. The thing is entirely impracticable and on the order of a swindle to take the people's money away and give it to the railroads." In view of such a condemnation as this, coming as it does from a beneficiary of the system at present in vogue, it would seem that Uncle Sam might well see his way clear to devise a more just and less expensive method of disposing of his public domain.

A CLAM HATCHERY.

The pearl button manufacturers of the country feel much pleased over the prospect of the clam hatchery which is to be erected at Fairport, a little town near Muscatine, Ia. The work is to be in charge of officials of the bureau of fisheries and will cost about $30,000. The plant will consist of buildings, pumping station and laboratories, and sixty acres of land, the greater portion of which is sloping and will be cut up into a series of some fifty terraced ponds, the water being pumped into those on the higher level and gradually seeping through to those below. So closely have the American streams in which clams abound been dredged in the past few years that the supply bids fair to become exhausted unless precautions are taken to protect and propagate them artificially.

GOOD LIME FOR LAND.

Replying to a query relative to the application of the limestone byproduct of beet sugar factories to sour or acid soils, the Illinois experiment station states that such product will be as valuable for this purpose as finely ground limestone, provided the burnt lime used does not contain too much magnesium, which element should not exceed 5 or 6 per cent. Where it does not contain magnesium in excess it has some advantages over natural ground limestone in that it contains much of the phosphorus of the sugar beet, together with considerable quantities of organic nitrogen from the protein and albumenoid compounds of the beets.

Experiments which have been recently conducted by the agricultural department show that fruit like oranges, grapes and apples may have their life considerably extended by cooling to a temperature of 40 degrees before shipment. Normally fruit is picked and packed under warm conditions and, while it cools during shipment, does not cool rapidly enough to prevent the rapid ripening of some fruit and the decay of other fruit. It seems clear that this precooling will not only extend the area over which such fruit may be shipped, but it will improve its quality and reduce the amount of ice required in refrigeration.

The very poor are triply handicapped in that scarcity of food is usually accompanied by shortage of fuel and thinness of clothing.

A hot soapstone wrapped in a piece of cloth and put in the foot of the bed in a cold room is worth at least 25 cents per application and is about the only thing that makes life endurable in a below zero country.

The discovery a few years ago of large deposits of flaxite or semi-fossil soft coal in the Dakotas and the more recent and rapid drift into fruit and poultry growing in the Puget sound valley country as a future source of fuel supply are of industrial interest.

The frost of winter cracks the water pipes, tops the vegetables stored in the cellar and cellar and kills tender trees but we do not, but the service it performs in pulverizing and loosening the soil of the field and making it easy for the plowman to handle is beyond calculating, more than offsetting the harm it works.

What a majority of folks handier for a larger part are of benefit them is theirs, the truth is that more people die from too little exercise than ever dies after they reach the age of forty-five. Every person who can stand on two feet and move his hands is better off if he has some regular work and exercise, if it isn't more than walking.

A Wolf river apple weighing twenty-five ounces and measuring sixteen and five-eighths inches in circumference took first prize for size at the Spokane national apple show. A Spokane Beauty weighing forty-one ounces and measuring seventeen and one-eighth inches in circumference was exhibited, but it was disqualified because of bruises received in harvesting or packing.

Added to the fact that most cornerib are built too wide and without chance for proper ventilation is another cause which is responsible for the spoiling of much corn in the cribs during seasons like the past, when the ear does not dry out properly before husking, and that is a slipshod job of husking which leaves much silk and husks on the corn as it is cribbed, serving to still further prevent proper circulation of the air.

Hood river apple growers received the highest prices for their 1909 crop that for any yet recorded. They were bought by Stolzhardt & Kelley of New York city and were handled through the local apple growers' union. Best Spitzenburgs brought $3.25 per bushel box, fancy Newtowns $2.25 to $2.40, fancy Jonathans $2, fancy Baldwins $1.90 and fancy Ortleys $2.25. The choice fruit was sold to Portland dealers at from $1.55 per box and less.

The grand champion fat steer of the 1909 International was King Ellsworth, a two-year-old pure bred Angus shown by the Kansas Agricultural college and weighing 1,750. The same animal was exhibited last year, when he weighed 1,400 pounds. His ration the past year has been corn, bran and oilmeal, with alfalfa hay. In the car lot exhibits the Shorthorns had the best of it, not only winning the championships in the fat and feeding classes, but the grand championship carload, the first time in the history of the big show, the prize bunch being a carload of yearlings.

It is probably safe to assume that if the true status of all dairy herds in the country could be known, tuberculosis would be found one of the greatest sources of no profit cows. The dairyman who applies the tuberculin test to his herd and eliminates affected animals not only does the public a service by disposing of hotbeds of disease, but in the long run puts dollars in his own pocket. Should he add to the tuberculin the Babcock test, to tell him what his cows are doing along the line of butter fat production, he will be able to spot every undesirable individual in the herd.

Treatment of the Separator.

The separator is a machine which should receive careful treatment if it is to do its best work. Foundations should be solid and the machine set perfectly level. All bearings should receive frequent flushings with kerosene. This will make the machine run easy and prolong its life. Keep the machine well oiled with the special oil sent out with the separator. Separators should be located in a clean, well ventilated place free from odors. It is not necessary to say that the separator should be taken apart and thoroughly cleaned and aired after each time it is used.

Frozen Apple Fluff.

This frozen dainty is quickly and easily made. Beat the whites of four eggs until stiff and dry; fold into the stiffly beaten whites one glass of apple jelly and a cup of pecanuts, shredded; whip lightly until these ingredients are well blended, then turn it into the freezer. As soon as the crank of the freezer begins to turn hard open the can and add a pint of sweetened whipped cream flavored with almond extract. Freeze until the consistency of mush is obtained. Serve in charlotte russe cases.—Good Housekeeping.

Truck gardening can be pursued with profit in Western Michigan. For instance Richard Stables, who has a small place near one of the larger cities of the region reports gross returns for 1909 at the rate of $352 to the acre. He secured this good showing by raising two crops during the season. First a crop of peas was harvested, which crop was harvested so as to return $200 an acre; then the ground was given over to potatoes and the returns were at the rate of 250 bushels to the acre, which with potatoes at 25c a bushel, is $62.50.

A new law in which the state of Michigan does not have to give charity unless needed, is saving the state considerable money, according to deputy Auditor General Simpson. This is the law which requires probate judges to file monthly reports of the number of persons committed to insane asylums, the amount of property they possess and the names of their immediate guardians or relatives. Different state institutions also render monthly reports, and with the two the state is able to determine whether any of the inmates are being supported by the state when wealthy relatives could easily afford to pay for their maintenance.

Deputy Simpson estimated that fully $150,000 will be saved yearly through this new law, and recently several cases have been unearthed where the people were able to care for the inmates.

By an act of the legislature of 1891, a state bounty fund of $100,000 was created, and there is still $98,450 on this fund. The last sum paid out of this fund was in May, 1907, when $2.0 was paid out.

The purpose of the appropriation was to pay claims against the state, dating from the beginning of the civil war. Previous to creating this fund, claims were paid from the general fund, upon the approval of the auditor general.

Unless more demands are made upon these funds than now seem likely, it will undoubtedly be taken off the books, and in case other claims come, they will be taken care of by the general fund through the auditor general's department.

The Riverman

By STEWART EDWARD WHITE

"Well, I'll be derned!" ejaculated one of the cowed rivermen. "That's the first time I ever see one lonesome sheriff gather in ten river hogs without the aid of a Gatlin'"

Orde watched them disappear.

"Jim," said he, "and you, Ellis, and you, and you and you, and you, get to work on that dam. And remember this—if you are arrested, go peaceably. Any resistance will spoil the whole game." The men broke into raucous cheers and laughter as the full significance of Orde's plan reached them. They streamed back to the dam.

Reed came out, eyes blazing.

Reed stormed back and forth for a moment, then departed at full speed up the road.

"Now, boys, get as much done as possible," urged Orde. "We better get back in the brush or he may try to arrest the whole killing of us on some sort of a blanket warrant."

"How about the other boys?" inquired North.

"I gave one of them a telegram to send to Daly," replied Orde. "Daly will be up to bail them out."

Once more they hid in the woods, and again, after a longer interval, the mill owner and the sheriff reappeared. Reed appeared to be expostulating violently and a number of times pointed up river, but the sheriff went ahead stolidly to the dam, summoned those working below and departed up the road as before. Reed stood uncertain until he saw the rivermen beginning to reconnoiter from the brush, then followed the officer at top speed.

Without the necessity of command a half dozen men leaped down on the apron. The previous crews had made considerable progress in weakening the heavy supports. As soon as these should be cut out and the backing removed the mere sawing through of the massive sill should carry away the whole obstruction.

At 4 o'clock the sheriff made his third appearance, this time in a sible hay frenzy.

"I will be flayed into comfab," said Orde, "but we'd jug me sure."

"He wouldn't jug me," spoke up Newmark. "I'll go down." The young man departed in his precise, methodical manner. About sunset he returned.

"Well?" the crew demanded.

"Reed wanted the sheriff to stay and protect the dam," reported Newmark. "Sheriff refused. Said his duty was simply to arrest on warrant and as often as Reed got out warrants he'd serve them. Reed said then he should get a posse and hunt up Orde and the rest of them. Sheriff replied that as far as he could see the terms of his warrant were covered by the men he found working on the dam. Reed demanded protection. Sheriff said for him to get on and protect and it would be enforced."

Orde inhaled the

"We, that's all right," broke in Orde, with satisfaction. "We'll have her out through before he gets that injunction."

"Yes," said Newmark, "and now he's gone to telegraph the governor to send the troops."

"Kind of expected that, I was," said Orde. "Let's see. The next train from Reddlin. That'll be here in the morning at sometime. I hope it'll be later."

"What will you do?" asked Newmark.

"Take chances," replied Orde.

The sun had dropped below the fringe of trees. Two straight, thin columns of smoke rose from the neighboring campfires. Orde, glancing around him, noticed these.

"Doctor," he commanded Shay, "get at your grub. Make some coffee right off and bring it down. Come on, boys!"

Over a score of men attacked the slabaway, for by now part of the jam crew had come down river. The pool above had recovered its volume. Water was beginning to trickle over the top of the gate. The men worked up to their knees in swift water. They could not see, and the strokes of ax or pick lost much of their force against the liquid. Down by the sluice a dozen lanterns flickered and blinked yellow against the blue blackness of the night. Orde opened the sluice gates. The water had become too deep for effective work, and a half hour's flow would relieve the pressure. The time was occupied in eating.

When the meal was finished the men lit their pipes and went back to work philosophically.

Near midnight a swaying lantern was seen approaching. Orde heard the sound of wheels. A moment later Daly's bulky form stepped into the illumination of the fire.

Orde wandered over to where his employer stood peering about him.

"Oh, there you are!" cried Daly angrily. "What in h— you up to here?"

"Running logs," replied Orde coolly.

"Running logs!" shouted Daly, producing a much folded newspaper. "How about this?"

Orde lowered the paper to the campfire. It was an extra, screaming with wood type:

WAR!

Rioting and Bloodshed In the Woods. Rivermen and Dam Owners Clash.

There followed a highly colored statement that a skirmish had left the field in possession of the rivermen, in spite of the sheriff and a large posse, but that troops were being rushed to the spot and that this "high handed defiance of authority" would soon be suppressed. It stated that the loss of life was as yet unknown.

"Don't you know any better than to get into that kind of a row down here?" said Daly. "Don't you realize that this isn't the northern peninsula?"

"Sure I do," replied Orde placidly. "Come along here till I show you the situation."

The sheriff did not reappear.—Reed evidently now pinned his faith to the troops.

By 3 o'clock the main abutments had been removed. The gate was then blocked to prevent its fall when its nether support should be withdrawn.

Suddenly was heard an exultant yell from one of the axmen. A brief instant later the snapping of wood fibers began like the rapid explosions of infantry fire; a crash and bang of timbers smote the air, and then the river, exultant, roaring with joy, rushed into the new passage opened for it.

Orde stormed into the camp.

"Roll out, you river hogs!" he shouted to those who had worked out their shifts earlier in the night. "Roll out, you well-oiled sons of guns, and hear the little birds sing praise!"

Suddenly Orde had froze in an attitude of attentive listening. "Hark!" said he.

Faint, the wandering morning breeze bore to their ears a sound whose difference from the louder noises near at hand alone rendered it audible.

"The troops!" exclaimed Orde, seizing a lantern and returned down the trail, followed eagerly by Newmark and every man in camp.

The men drew a little to one side, watching the dim line of the forest, dark against the paling sky. A man rode out of the shadow and reined up by the fire. "Halt!" commanded a harsh voice. The rivermen could make out the troops, three or four score of them standing rigid at attention. Reed pushed forward.

"I wish to inquire, sir," asked the commanding officer of Orde, "if you have gone mad to counsel your men to resist civil authority?"

"I have not resisted civil authority," replied Orde respectfully. "The reports have been false. The sheriff of this county has arrested about twenty of my men single handed and without the slightest trouble."

"Mr. Morris," cried the officer sharply, "is what this man says true?"

"It sure is. Never had so little fuss arresting rivermen before in my life."

"Then why the devil am I dragged up here with my men on the jump?" cried the officer explosively. "Who's responsible for this insanity anyway? Don't you know," he roared at Reed, "that I have no standing in the presence of civil law?"

Reed started to speak.

"You're going to go with it, sir. Do it or quit. And, by heaven, you'll have something worse than me to deal with the state! About, face! Forward, march!"

Orde burst into his deep roar of laughter.

"Now, you see, boys," he said, slipping his fists into his eyes, "if you'd just go now, what we'd have a thing. So I'm out in none thank you."

"I tell ye I'm not done with ye yet," threatened Reed. "I'll sue ye for damages, and I'll get 'em too."

"Now, hop along," urged Orde. "We'll pay you any legitimate damages, of course, but you can't expect to let a log go out of a river in a month. And remember all of you. See here, you two just see that the upper gate is closed."

Reed hastily retorted.

"We'll see Daly here," said Daly. "I'll just get things straightened, then the logs can go out of the river, reliable."

Chapter 4

WHEN Newmark awoke after more to interest to affairs the morning was well spent. On the river the work was going forward with the precision of clockwork.

Orde discovered about noon that the jam crew was having its troubles. Immediately below Reed's dam ran a long chute strewn with bowlders which was alternately a shallow or a stretch of white water according as the stream rose or fell. Ordinarily the logs were flushed over this declivity by opening the gate, behind which a head of water had been accumulated. Now, however, the efficiency of the gate had been destroyed.

"I wonder if we can't drop that gate way down to get something for a head," said Orde to the foreman.

The two men examined the chute and the sluice gate attentively for some time.

"If we could clear out the splinters and rubbish we might splice a couple of saplings on each side for the gate to slide down into," speculated North.

The logs were held up in the pond, and a crew of men set to work to cut away the splintered ends of the old sill and apron. The current rendered footing impossible, so all the work had to be done from above. Wet wood gripped the long saws viselike, so that a man's utmost strength could scarcely budge them. Nevertheless they held to it. Orde, satisfied that they would succeed, departed up river to the rear.

This crew he found working lustily among some overflowed woods. They were herding the faggards of the flock. The subsidence of the water consequent upon the opening of the sluice gate had left stranded and in shallows many hundreds of the logs. From the advantage of deadwood, stumps or other logs the "sackers" pushed the unwieldly timbers forward, leaping, splashing, heaving, shoving, until at last the steady current of the main river seized the logs and tore them away. With marvelous skill they topped the dripping, bobby, rolling timbers, treading them over and over back and forth, by unconscious preservation of equilibrium.

Hardly had Orde the opportunity to look about at the progress making, however, before he heard his name shouted from the bank. Looking up, to his surprise he saw the solemn cook waving a frantic dish towel at him. Nothing could induce the cook to attempt the logs.

Reed wheeled, his thumb on the hammer,

"What is it, Charlie?" asked Orde, leaping ashore and stamping the loose water from his boots.

"It's all up," confided the cook pessimistically. "It's no good. He's stopped us now."

"What's off? Who's stopped what?"

"Reed. He's druv the men from the dam with a shotgun. We might as well quit."

"Shotgun, hey?" exclaimed Orde. "Well, the old sort of a gun?" He thought a moment, his lips puckered as though to whistle; then, as usual, he laughed amusedly. "Let's go take a look at the army," said he.

He swung away at a round pace, followed rather breathlessly by the cook.

Orde found the center of the dam was occupied by Reed, his pug hat fuzzier than ever, his coattails and huge trousers flapping at his every movement. Over his shoulder he carried a long percussion lock shotgun. Perched along the bank sat the rivermen, watching him in silence.

"What's the matter?" inquired Orde, approaching.

"If ye two don't protect me I'll protect myself," Reed proclaimed. "I give ye fair warning."

"But surely," said Orde, "we have a right to run our logs through. It's an open river."

"And hev ye been runnin' your logs through," cried the old man excitedly. "Hey, ye? First off ye begin to tear down my dam, and then when the first lucifer a'comin' and a-rarin' through ye come cruisin' with my boys, or cuss critter or me, a-lovin' the sight of us otherwise a-modifyin' my structure."

Orde tipped forward. He coolly placed his hands on the muzzle of the gun.

"All in the old spirit of '76," replied Orde. "Only I shoot. I'll come down."

Reed pulled back to the war [illegible].

"Surely," spoke up Newmark, "whatever the statute of the dangers may be you have a legal right to run your [illegible]."

Orde rolled a quizzical eye in his direction.

"Perfectly correct, sir," he drawled, "but we're engaged in the act, a completion of getting out logs. By the time the law was all adjusted and a head of steam up the water would be down. In this game you get out logs first and think about law afterward."

"How about legal damages?" insisted Newmark.

"Legal damages!" scoffed Orde. "Legal damages! Why, we count legal damages as part of our regular expenses, like potatoes."

Orde walked to the edge of the dam and stood looking down current. Then he turned to the grimly silent rivermen.

"Boys," he commanded briefly, "get your peaveys and come along."

Tom went out to buy a pair of gloves for his sweetheart's birthday present and to make a purchase for his father. Of course he got things mixed, as they always do in stories, and the young lady received a pair of heavy woolen men's socks with the following note:

"Dear Helen: Please accept these in consideration of my love for you. Oh, that I were to be the only one to see them when you wear them! If you find any difficulty in getting them on, blow in them. Yours affectionately, Tom."—Success Magazine.

DIET AND BRAIN GROWTH.

Idiots Benefited by Sheep's Thyroid Gland—Oatmeal Experiments

The problem whether a diet can have much influence upon brain building has exercised many philosophers and scientists during the last few years. A striking theory is advanced upon the question by Sir James Crichton-Browne in Cassell's Magazine.

"It is now a matter of common knowledge," he writes, "that a transformation that may be called astonishing has been wrought in cretinous idiots and the victims of myxoedema—a grim disease—by preparations of the thyroid gland of the sheep.

"Dwarfish, feeble minded, toadlike, hidebound beings—mere human caricatures—have been made to add a cubit to their stature, to display intelligence and assume comely lineaments by the supply to them of the material of which they had been deprived by defect in their own thyroid glands.

"Some recent scientific observations have thrown light on the physiological effects of oatmeal. It has been shown that in rats fed for eight weeks on oatmeal and water the thyroid gland was double the size of the same gland in rats that had been fed for the same time on bread and milk.

"Now, the secretion of this gland is intimately connected with nutritive processes throughout the organism, atrophy or destruction of the gland and cessation of its secretion being productive of cretinism or myxoedema. It seems probable, therefore, that the bulk and brawniness of the northerners have been in some measure due to the stimulation of their thyroid gland by porridge in childhood.

"Oatmeal is apparently through its action on the thyroid as well as directly conducive to the building up of the brain."

AGING WINES WITH OZONE.

Dorn Process Shortens Period From Years to a Few Months.

The quality of wine is greatly improved by natural aging in wood or glass, but this method keeps a large amount of capital unemployed and involves a loss of 4 or 5 per cent by evaporation, says the Scientific American. The same improvement in the wine can be accomplished more rapidly by the action of oxygen. Boussingault proved that exposure to oxygen makes new wine less acrid and hastens the deposition of impurities in the form of lees. It is asserted, furthermore, that wine does not improve by age either in wood or in glass unless it has already absorbed a certain quantity of oxygen from the air, and Pasteur has proved that wine deprived of oxygen is not altered by keeping.

Artificial aging has often been tried, but it has been found impossible to obtain the desired result by the introduction of either pure oxygen or pure ozone. The process patented by Alfred Dorn a few years ago appears to be more successful. It consists in the introduction of oxygen and its transformation into ozone in the interior of the mass of wine. A rubber gas tube connected with an oxygen tank and an induction coil is inserted into the cask, and a portion of the oxygen thus introduced is converted into ozone, by the electric current. The operation is continued for a period varying from twenty to ninety minutes, according to the quality and quantity of the wine. For delicate spirits it may be necessary to continue the treatment six hours. This rapid treatment must be followed by natural aging for a short time, but new Bordeaux wine acquires by this method in from forty to sixty days the quality of wine kept for many years in bottles.

Forks.

Neither the Greeks nor the Romans possessed forks. It was, according to that curious book of travels, "Coryat's Crudities," published in 1611, left to Italy to invent them, because, as the author quaintly observes, "the Italian cannot by any means endure to have his dish touched with hands, seeing that all men's fingers are not alike clean."

VALUE OF CONCRETE

Roads Constructed of This Material Very Serviceable.

DURABLE FOR HEAVY TRAFFIC

They Can Be Maintained at a Considerably Low Cost—Freedom From Dust and Mud a Good Feature—Experiment In Michigan.

In a paper read before the annual good roads convention, held recently at Cleveland, O., Edward N. Hines, chairman of the board of Wayne county (Mich.) road commissioners, expressed his views regarding concrete roads in the following manner:

Concrete roads would meet the ideal conditions of road building because of comparatively low first cost, durability, low maintenance cost, ease of traction and freedom from dust and mud.

The value of concrete roads was shown by a recent experiment near Detroit, Mich., where a road was made seventeen feet eight inches wide of six inches, with shoulders on each side of the natural soil, making the width twenty-six feet over all at its narrowest point.

The proposed specification was drafted, it being the intention of the board

A WELL BUILT CONCRETE ROAD.

to do the necessary grading, tiling, ditching, putting in of manholes, building shoulders and, in fact, doing all the work but the actual concreting.

Ninety-eight cents a barrel was paid for cement and 75 cents a yard for sand, and the prices of limestone and crushed cobble are shown in the specification. The average haul was about two miles. Two thicknesses of three ply tar paper were used in the three twenty-five foot sections, the fourth section being made half an inch wide and filled with a composition of four parts soft pitch to one part Trinidad asphalt, to which was added 3 per cent of still wax, the whole heated and poured into the joint in a boiling state. A strip of southern pine was also used as an experimental joint.

The following specifications are those under which such a road can be constructed:

All cement used should be portland cement of American manufacture. No more than 8 per cent of the cement should fail to pass through a No. 100 sieve nor more than 25 per cent should fail to pass through a No. 200 sieve, and it should stand a test of 150 pounds per square inch tensile strain when made into briquets and exposed in air until final set and the balance of twenty-four hours immersed in water. One day in air and six days in water should show a tensile strength of at least 450 pounds. One day in air and twenty-seven days in water should show a tensile strength of at least 550 pounds, and when mixed in proportions by weight of one of cement to three of sand and exposed in air one day and in water six days it should stand a tensile strain of at least 150 pounds and in twenty-eight days a strain of at least 200 pounds per square inch.

Sand used in making concrete should be clean, dry, crushed quartz, trap rock, granite or well graded bank, lake or river sand, passing a No. 10 sieve of No. 25 wire, and be so graded as to contain fine and coarse particles of the same grade of material, the coarse particles to predominate.

Stone for concrete can be purchased at the following prices per ton, which prices represent the actual cost of the stone laid down: Two inch, $1.80 per ton; chips, $1.50 per ton; screenings, $2 per ton.

In case of hard stone, weights should be computed by measurement on the basis of 2300 pounds per cubic yard for two inch stone, 2700 pounds per cubic yard for chips and 2400 pounds per cubic yard for screenings.

Concrete for the first course should consist of one part of cement, two parts of sand and five parts of broken limestone and for second course one part of cement, two parts of sand and three parts of limestone evenly mixed.

In placing the concrete in position in the construction of the pavement the men should place the concrete where directed and so as to keep the different layers of uniform thickness. Each layer should be well tamped with an approved tamper and as directed by the engineer.

The second course must be laid within twenty minutes after the first course is completed and placed and shaped similar to the first course. And at night or at any other time when the work is necessarily left off the second and third layers should be completed up to a contraction joint. In other words, no section of pavement should be allowed to be left unfinished for a longer period of time than twenty minutes after work thereon has been started.

After the second course of concrete is laid and until it has thoroughly set it should be protected from the sun by a canvas or other suitable covering.

When the concrete is sufficiently hard to warrant, this covering should be removed and the concrete covered with a layer of sand or gravel about one inch in depth and sprinkled and kept damp to prevent the surface of the concrete from drying out too rapidly, which covering should be left on the concrete for a period of seven days.

Expansion joints should be placed in said pavement every twenty-five feet by actual measurement, such joints to be made by placing in position a one-half inch thick strip of wood (southern pine) of the same width as the thickness of the road metal and cut so as to conform to the finished surface of the pavement. This board should be removed after the concrete has become set, but not until twenty-four hours have elapsed after the placing of the concrete on both sides of the board. And when the board is removed the space left by it should be filled with a filler of the following composition: Four parts soft pitch and one part asphalt (refined Trinidad), to which mixture must be added 3 per cent of still wax, the whole to be heated and poured into the joints in a boiling state.

Pumping by Wind Power.

The speed of a windmill depends on the angle the wheels are placed at with reference to the wind. If a slow, steady motion is desired the sails must be set at a steep incline. Such sails must be long and narrow and set closer together.

In pumping from a deep well the angle of the sails of the windmill is such that the wheel will revolve the same number of revolutions a minute that it is desired to operate the pump. This makes it possible to connect the mill directly to the pump without the gearing necessary where a high speed is employed in operation of the pump. While the low speed means less water pumped, it greatly lengthens the life of the mill.

In the illustration the windmill, tower and tank are combined in a rather ornamental structure. When the well is located in a large meadow with the products which it produces to be distributed the tank may be upon the surface, as shown, and the windmill frame be constructed overhead. When the mill is to be located on lower ground the water tank may be placed midway on the windmill frame or on top, with the windmill just above the tank.

A tank placed thirty feet from the ground will give a pressure of fifteen pounds when the tank is full. This would lift water to the second story of a house standing on the same level. A garden hose nozzle connected with this tank would force a stream nearly as high as the bottom of the tank, or twenty five to thirty feet for ordinary use. Twenty barrels of water would supply a garden hose nozzle for a little over an hour. These small tanks are commonly used in connection with an eight to ten foot windmill. The same sized mill, however, may be used with a larger tank when the water is to be used for household purposes, bath room, lawn and fire protection. A sixty-five barrel tank will supply a garden hose nozzle for about four hours.

Land is so scarce in Japan and the people are so numerous that a farm rarely consists of more than an acre or two. These little farms are divided up into tiny fields.

BOYNE CITY WINS BOTH GAMES

With Charlevoix High School Friday Night

FORREST MILLER BOYNE CITY STAR

Scores 19 to 14 First Game—Second Game 22 to 31

Charlevoix Will Play at Home With East Jordan February 19 and With Mancelona March 4.

Charlevoix and Boyne City first and second teams met on the field of honor at the Charlevoix theater last Friday evening and defeated the locals in both games. Boyne City came here with two strong teams and showed good work through the games. Considerable roughness was displayed by two of their members which was against the rules and uncalled for. Such plays caused a great many fouls and corrupt the game. Charlevoix showed a great deal of weakness this game and were not accurate in their basket work. Boyne City drove over and the games were delayed until 8:15. The first game was between the second teams and Forrest Miller for the visitors showed himself up as the star player and it is our prediction that he will be the fastest basket ball player in northern Michigan if he continues to stay in the game throughout the season. Hamlin makes a good showing for the seconds. Following is the second team game by 15 minute halves:

FIRST HALF

Ball goes to Charlevoix territory and Hamlin fields two points, Boyne City fouls and Hamlin baskets one point. Charlevoix fouls and Miller for Boyne baskets one point. Boyne covers ball in their territory and Miller baskets two points, Charlevoix's guard, Cram, fields two points in return play. Batcheller shows fast work in scrimmage and makes a field play for two points. Charlevoix covers and Hamlin neatly takes a two count basket. During the next few minutes of the playing Charlevoix does fair work but do not make any points. Miller for Boyne scores three baskets from the field, adding six more points to their score. In this half there was considerable roughness on the part of both teams. Score at the end of the half in Boynes' favor, 11 to 7.

Beeman took Miller's place in this half.

Ball goes to Charlevoix and they foul to Boyne, Batcheller makes one point. Hamlin for Charlevoix scores a basket from the field followed by a foul basket by Mitchell. Boyne holds ball in their territory and Beeman scores a two point basket. Charlevoix fouls and Batcheller scores one point. Ball goes to Boyne and they foul. Charlevoix scores a point through Mitchell. Charlevoix covers the ball and Mitchell fields two points. Batcheller in turn fields two points and Boyne fouls to the locals. Mitchell baskets one more point. Boyne covers the ball and Lansby scores a field basket. Time called and Boyne wins with the score of 19 to 14.

The following are the second teams as they lined up:

Charlevoix	Position	Boyne
Lee Powers	Right Forward	F. Miller
W. Mitchell	Right Guard	L. Silverstine
Leeland Cram	Center	Lansby
William Poole	Left Guard	Robinson

The Charlevoix girls occupied one of the boxes and had it decorated with banners and pennants of Charlevoix. During the intermission of the two games which lasted for about ten minutes the girls rendered many songs and class yells and were answered by the Boyne City girl and boy visitors. The Charlevoix rooters also gave yells which showed the enthusiasm of the the students in this winter sport.

Hawkins and DeVoe were timekeepers and DeVoe acted as scoreman. Miller and Butler were referees during both games.

The following are the first teams as they lined up for action:

H. Jacobs	right forward	H. White
H. Paddock	left forward	F. Miller
D. Durgan	center	H. Halloran
J. Gray	right guard	H. Silverstine
H. Wallace	left guard	D. Beach

Following are the plays by halves of the first teams in twenty minute halves:

FIRST HALF

F. Miller takes Wither's place for Boyne City.

Ball goes to Boyne City territory and Halloran fields two points. Ball goes into Charlevoix territory and is covered by Boyne and Halloran again baskets two points. Ball fielded to Charlevoix and Durgan baskets two points. Durgan fields the ball to Charlevoix territory and again wins a two point basket followed by Miller of Boyne City with the same count. On the following double foul Charlevoix failed and Boyne scored one point. Boyne fields the ball and Silverstine makes a basket with two counts. White follows up and scores two points more. Charlevoix covers the ball for a two point basket by Durgan and in the next play Jacobs fielded another basket for the locals. Paddock followed in the race and fielded a two point basket. Boyne covered the ball and White fielded two points and was followed by Jacobs for the locals for the same count. Boyne covered the ball and Miller darted in with a basket from the field followed by White who it seems was never guarded. Time called with the score 12 to 17 in Boyne's favor.

In this half there was some roughness on the part of one of Boyne's guards.

SECOND HALF

Ball goes to Charlevoix territory and is covered by Boyne with Miller there to basket a field play. Ball to Charlevoix and Paddock fields a basket. Boyne covers and quickly scores a basket from the field by White. Beach covers and baskets two more points followed by White for the same count. Charlevoix recovers and Paddock after several attempts makes a basket of two points. Charlevoix fields and Wallace scores a two count basket followed by Paddock in the next play.

Following the next few minutes play there were several outside fouls on the part of both teams. Beach covers and scores a field play. Charlevoix also covers and Paddock scores a fielder, Halloran made the next basket and Charlevoix fielded the ball to their territory and Boyne covered with Miller scoring the last basket. Time called and Charlevoix loses by a score of 22 to 31.

Charlevoix showed great weakness and were left scattered when Boyne used their tricks in covering the ball. Boyne is one of the hardest teams to defeat in this part. Boyne and Mancelona have yet to clash and then we will know who is who. Wallace kept up his end at fielding but lacked the support.

The Charlevoix City Band rendered several good selections which were appreciated.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRES

In Eastern End of County Last Week

Store of J. Patterson, Boyne City, and H. Jaffe, Boyne Falls.

Fire at Boyne City Wednesday night completely destroyed the building and dry goods stock of J. Patterson on Lake street. The origin of the fire is supposed to have been somewhere about the stove. By quick work the firemen kept the fire confined to the one building. The Building which was owned by John D. Wood of Petoskey was a total loss as was also the stock which was insured for $7,000.

Thursday night the three story building of William Myers of Boyne Falls which was occupied by H. Jaffe's general store, was burned to the ground, both building and stock which was insured for $4,000, being a total loss.

DR. LEACH DEAD

Was a Former Pioneer Resident of This City

Author of History of Grand Traverse Region Which is Standard.

Word has been received here that Dr. Morgan L. Leech died at his home in Springdale, Arkansas, on the morning of January 26. Owing to advanced years, he has been quite feeble for the last year and while his death was not unexpected, it will carry sadness to the hearts of many in the Grand Traverse region, who, in earlier days, knew and loved Dr. Leach.

Dr. Leach was the elder brother of the Hon. D. C. Leach, who died at Springfield, Mo., December 21, last.

Dr. Leach was born in Erie county, New York, April 1, 1821, and was the eldest of a large family of children. In the early days of of Michigan history, Dr. Leach's family moved to this state and endured all the privations and hardships of pioneer life. In 1851, Dr. Leach entered the University of Michigan in the medical department and continued his studies, earning his own way as he went along, spending what time he could in the university, then going out to earn a little more money and it was not until 1858 that he received his degree as doctor of medicine.

On the organization of the first Michigan cavalry at the outbreak of the civil war, Dr. Leach enlisted as a private and was soon made hospital steward. In the retreat of Gen. Banks before the overwhelming forces of Stonewall Jackson after the battle of Kernstown, Dr. Leach, who was with a wagon train of sick and wounded, was captured by the confederates, after receiving four severe wounds. He remained a prisoner in the hands of the confederates for some time, was then paroled spent some time in camp Chase, Ohio, where he was ordered with other paroled prisoners, was discharged and returned home.

In the fall of 1862, having nearly recovered from the effects of his wounds, Dr. Leach recieved a commission as surgeon in the 9th Michigan cavalry, then organizing at Coldwater. He passed through all the stirring events of the following years of the war in the middle south, not retiring from the service until about the close of the war.

In 1880, he removed to Charlevoix, two years later going to Traverse City, which was his home until a few years ago, when he removed to Arkansas.

Dr. Leach was the author of a history of the Grand Traverse region which is the recognized authority.

SAWYER HAS RESIGNED

As Secretary of West Michigan Development Bureau

One of Original Founders Has Given Excellent Service to the Work.

T. M. Sawyer of Ludington, who is one of the original founders of the Western Michigan Development bureau, and who has been secretary of the organization since the first meeting of the men, who banded themselves together for the purpose of advertising this region, has tendered his resignation. President D. H. Day of Glen Haven, has directed that the publicity office at Traverse City perform the duties of secretary until the next meeting of the board of directors which will likely be held in that city some time during the month of February. Mr. Sawyer has proved himself one of the most enthusiastic of the bureau workers. He has great confidence in the future of this part of the state and it was a deep regret to him that he found his personal business demanding attention to such an extent as to not leave him time for the development work. He however, as editor of the pioneer paper of Mason county and as secretary of the Ludington board of trade, will direct the development campaign within his own county and see that the excellent opportunities offered by the county about Ludington will be known to the world at large. During the half dozen years that he has been secretary of the Ludington board of trade, he has worked out a number of plans in behalf of the general welfare of his community, that have proved successful, to an exceptional degree.

Traverse City is now the real home of the Western Michigan Development bureau as well as the working home. As originally planned, the official headquarters were to be at Ludington, but the board of directors, at a meeting held on January 13, adopted articles of incorporation, which made Traverse City the home of the organization. These articles of association have been accepted by the secretary of state and now the bureau has a legal existence and enjoys all the rights and powers that go with corporate being.

Mrs. Jane Knight Died at her Home in this City Monday

Mrs. Jane Knight, an old pioneer of this section, died at her home in this city, early Monday morning. Mrs. Knight was born in Ontario, Canada, seventy-six years ago and was married to Richard Knight in that province, soon after moving to Waukesha county, Wisconsin, where Mr. Knight followed the profession of blacksmithing. They came to this section in 1862, settling on a homestead in Banks township where Mr. Knight took a prominent part in public affairs, serving the people in many positions of trust, among them representative in the state legislature. Seventeen years ago they moved to this city where Mr. Knight died ten years ago.

Mrs. Knight was the mother of three children, Mrs. A. E. Palmer of Kalkaska, Mrs. Eva Johnson who died sixteen years ago and William who resides upon the farm in Banks. Mrs. Knight had long been a member of the Congregational church and the funeral was held from the church Tuesday afternoon with Rev. H. A. Putnam officiating.

PAYTON—GILBERT

Popular East Jordan Young Couple Married Wednesday Evening.

A very quiet wedding took place at eight o'clock Wednesday evening January 26, at the home of the late Dr. and Mrs. F. C. Warne of East Jordan, the principals being Miss Mildred Bell Gilbert and Vernon Swayne Payton of that village, Rev. A. D. Grigsby officiating, the Episcopal ring service being used.

The bride who was given away by her uncle, John Warne of Petoskey, wore cream messeline and carried American Beauty roses. She was attended by Miss Elizabeth Warne, while Mr. Payton was attended by Fred Renord. The room was beautifully decorated with white carnations and similax. Miss Minnie Payton played Mendelssohn's wedding march. Following the ceremony a wedding supper was served. Out of town guests were J. Warne and daughter of Petoskey, Miss Helen M. Foster of Grand Rapids, Fred Renord of Montana, and County Clerk and Mrs. Payton and daughter of this city, parents of the groom.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Payton are very popular young people of our neighboring town, where Mr. Payton is a prominent druggist. They began housekeeping at once in a home which Mr. Payton had prepared for his bride.

WOMAN'S CONGRESS

Was a Decided Success in Every Way

Not Class Helped Very Much in the Congress Work.

The first Woman's Congress of Charlevoix county was a decided success, the number in attendance being ninety-seven.

The subjects presented were such as appealed to town and country homemakers and were very much appreciated. The work done proved that women from the farms are giving intelligent thought to the manner of conducting the affairs of the household, to the importance of conveniences and pleasant surroundings; and certainly farm life does not prevent a woman being able to speak well and profitably in public as was shown by Mrs. E. J. Creyts of Lansing and others.

The presence of the Normal class and their very efficient teacher, Miss Hines, is a sufficient hint of the increase of interest in farm matters in the near future.

Mrs. Creyts tried to impress upon her hearers that a woman's work is uplifting, ennobling a labor of love, and in no sense to be looked upon as drudgery.

The program was brightened by music given by the Normal class. A rising vote of thanks was given to Mr. Vanpelt for the use of his hall.

The election of officers resulted in the re-election of Mrs. Elmer Ingalls as president and Mrs. James McGeagh as secretary.

IS A GREAT COUNTRY FOR OATS

But They Don't Have "Fruit" With "Flavor"

Horses Run Out all Winter and Require Very Little Feed—Is Not as Cold as it is in British Columbia

Medicine Hat, January 23, 1910

Editor of COURIER:

I am reading the COURIER of January 12. I noticed an item by your Atwood correspondent of a letter from Walter Chamberlin in which he says the thermometer registered as low as 40 below zero. Now I wish to state that Walter Chamberlin is in Revelstoke, B. C., and has been since early last fall, and that is in the neighborhood of four hundred miles west of Medicine Hat. That does not apply to this town. I will say that the lowest I have known it here is twenty-eight below, about a month ago; for the last two or three days it has been like spring weather and the snow is nearly all gone.

My horses have run out in the pasture all winter and have not been in the stable more than four or five nights all winter and all I have fed them was about three pints of oats once a day and throw out some oat straw to them in the worst weather and I would not be ashamed to put them by the side of any of the horses in Charlevoix county that have been stabled all winter, barring those that are fed up for winter work.

Now I am from Charlevoix and do quite a little bragging for that county to the people here, but at the same time I do not like to have such statements made about our country when they are not so, and even if it were all we would have to do would be to turn on a little more gas and if your correspondents wants to see crops raised send them to Medicine Hat and I can show him a bin of oats that went over sixty bushels per acre. Also I can show a sack of white Banner oats which came from a field that I helped thresh that went one hundred and ten bushels per acre now when your Antrim county farmers can beat that you can let me know and I will be ready to hike for Michigan, but will say that I would not mind if I had a barrel of those apples I have seen you blowing of in your paper so much lately.

Yours truly,
Norman W. Smith,

REVIVAL MEETINGS

Will Begin at the Methodist Church next Sunday.

Revival meetings begin at the Methodist church next Sunday. Rev. K. H. Brady of Grand Rapids has been secured as evangelist. During his years as pastor he developed such evangelistic powers that he has been persuaded to devote his time exclusively to this work. He comes to us direct from his successful campaign in Coldwater. The Methodist people of Charlevoix are looking for a great meeting.

The earnest Christians are eager for the meetings to begin. The careless Christians should attend. The backsliders by all means should come. Those who have never been converted ought not to miss one of the services. All are invited.

The church will be filled Sunday. God will be with us. We will look for you.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. THE NEW MACADAM.

How Road Builders Have Improved on Scotchman's Idea.

IDEAL HIGHWAY NECESSITIES

Careful Grading, Good Drainage, Substantial Foundation and a Wearing Surface Necessary For the Up to Date Macadamized Road.

In a recent speech on the construction and maintenance of macadam roads Austin B. Fletcher, secretary of the Massachusetts highway commission, said:

Macadam's road is a thing of the past. In fact, the road of the kind built by the Scotchman John Loudon Macadam and named in his honor has been obsolete in this country for some time.

Macadam knew nothing of machine broken stone, and he did not dream that a broken stone roadway could be made as smooth as a billiard table by the use of steam road rollers.

In these days when we speak of a macadam road we mean a road with the following characteristics:

A road with easy gradients, usually not exceeding a five foot rise in 100 feet of length.

A road with drainage appliances so perfect that substantially no water reaches the broken stone from below.

A road with a foundation consisting of either the natural soil, if suitable, otherwise of artificially placed gravel or unbroken stone, so that the foundation with the superimposed broken stone will have sufficient strength to distribute over the underlying soil any load to which the road is likely to be subjected.

A road with a wearing surface of two or more layers of broken stone, small in size, those at the bottom usually not more than two and one-half inches in diameter and those at the top generally varying from one and one-quarter inches to one-half inch in diameter, each course or layer carefully spread, uniform in depth and rolled thoroughly with a steam road roller before the next course is placed. By this process, the rolling being done on thin layers, the stones become thoroughly compacted and the void spaces or interstices between the stones are largely eliminated. The final process consists in spreading over the surface of the upper layer of broken stone a thin covering of the screenings which result from the machine breaking of the stones and which contain a considerable proportion of fine dust, then dusting or grouting the screenings into such voids as remain between the broken stone and rolling the road with the steam roller.

BEAUTIFUL STRETCH OF MACADAMIZED ROADWAY.

[From Good Roads Magazine, New York.]

So far as the treatment of macadam roads is concerned, the remedy seems to be in the application of protective coats or coverings of a bituminous nature.

Before any of the bituminous materials are applied it is essential that the road surface be evened up and patched where necessary, rolled and swept clean of all dust. The bituminous materials are then applied hot to the road surface by means of spraying machines or gravity distributers or by hand in quantities varying from one-quarter to three-quarters of a gallon to the square yard and immediately covered evenly with sand, fine gravel or broken stone screenings.

The original maintenance will be merely the cost of renewing the covering, probably from 1 cents to 5 cents per square yard per annum. By this method no wear whatever will take place on the broken stone, and in a sense that portion of the ordinary macadam road which takes the wear will thereafter be only a foundation for the bituminous wearing coat.

The preservative referred to would probably be inadequate for traffic, and the introduction of bituminous binders into the voids between the broken stones would be necessary.

A good deal of work of this sort is being done now in an experimental way by mixing the bituminous material with the broken stone before it is placed on the roadway or by grouting the bituminous material into the spaces between and around the broken stone after it has been placed and partially rolled.

The cost of the ordinary macadam road is probably from 20 to 50 cents per square yard, and the roadway will require a protective covering at least as often as once in two years. It would be economical to rely upon the protective covering and to omit the bituminous material from the voids between the stone while the traffic remains as at present.

EULOGY OF GLADSTONE.

Ambassador Bryce's Tribute to Statesman on Centenary of His Birth.

Here are some gullies to greatness as chosen from the Life of William Ewart Gladstone by James Bryce, British ambassador at Washington, who recently spoke at Carnegie hall, in New York under the auspices of the Clyde forms at the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the British statesman.

According to Mr. Bryce, who was an intimate friend of Mr. Gladstone, these were the characteristics which made him great:

His oratory, by which he first won fame and maintained his ascendency.

His great fighting force, which was aroused in the greatest effectiveness when under formidable attack.

His capacity for grasping the whole of a subject, which made him a great minister of finance.

His caution, his strong sense of personal duty and responsibility of office.

His intellectual curiosity, which showed itself in the incessant reading of poetry, theology, political economy and history.

His force of character, tenacity, strenuous will, untiring energy, rested only by a change of labor.

His self restraint. He was never rude or acrimonious.

His modesty, never speaking of himself, but always wholly occupied mentally in the subject under discussion.

His faithfulness to his followers, never breaking the confidence of a friend.

"Gladstone held in high reverence the liberty of this American republic," added Mr. Bryce. "His admiration for George Washington was boundless. He placed Washington, in respect of his fidelity to freedom, far above Oliver Cromwell.

"He was much blamed for having conceded as prime minister to the arbitration of the Alabama claims, but everybody now recognizes this was an act of the highest wisdom, for it removed a cause of quarrel between Britain and Canada on the one side and the United States on the other and laid the foundation of that friendship which now happily exists and which he so much rejoiced to see growing during his later years.

"Although he never actually took sides during the civil war of 1861-5, he did once or twice use language which gave that impression, and he admitted frankly afterward that he had not properly understood the real issues involved. Such ignorance was common among the upper classes of England, who were then very ill informed about American affairs."

The herd of swine should be of uniform color, and the lots of swine for market should be of as near uniform size, stock and color as possible. The packers pay more for this kind of hogs.

NEEDFUL KNOWLEDGE

Charlevoix People Should Learn to Detect the Approach of Kidney Disease.

The symptoms of kidney trouble are so unmistakable that they leave no ground for doubt. Sick kidneys excrete a thick, cloudy, offensive urine, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding. The back aches constantly, headaches and dizzy spells may occur and the victim is often weighed down by a feeling of languor and fatigue. Neglect these warnings and there is danger of dropsy, Bright's Disease, or diabetes. Any one of these symptoms is warning enough to begin treating the kidneys at once. Delay often proves fatal.

You can use no better remedy than Doan's Kidney Pills. Here's Charlevoix proof:

W. George Linn, P. O. Box 41, Charlevoix, Mich., says: "We have used Doan's Kidney Pills in our family for the past five years and have found that they are very effective in relieving troubles arising from disordered kidneys. We have yet to learn of a case in which Doan's Kidney Pills have failed to live up to the claims made for them."

At the beginning of each session when the deputy takes his seat he will press a button in front of him and so record his presence. Then at the time of the vote he will vote "Yes," "No" or his wish to abstain by pressing the necessary button.

PRESERVING THE HAIR.

How to Treat a Scalp When the Weather Is Cold.

If women would remember that cold weather dries the hair and makes it unmanageable they might be able to treat the scalp so the tresses would be healthy and could be coiled into pretty coiffures. Water sometimes does more harm than good by increasing the stiffness of the hair as the liquid dries out. As a matter of fact, when each hair seems possessed to stand on end only brushing and the application of some mixture that contains oil is effective.

Oils, besides neutralizing the condition of dryness and making the hair easier to handle, have the added virtue of tonic properties and if massaged into the scalp the benefit after some weeks is pronounced.

A tonic of this kind that has been used for several generations by one family is made from sixteen ounces of pure cologne and two ounces of castor oil. Far from being greasy or unpleasant, this mixture is easily put on and has an agreeable odor. Combining less oil, but stronger in tonic properties, is a combination of four ounces of cologne, half an ounce of tincture of cantharides, a quarter of a dram each of oils of lavender and rosemary. The best way of applying either of these is to make many parts close together on the scalp and rub the liquid into each, using either the finger tips or a small brush.

If the hair is extremely dry the application may be used every day, but in many cases every other day is sufficient. Too much of the tonic will make the hair heavy with grease and altogether unmanageable.

When the hair is falling and is dry and hard in texture a stimulating mixture to use may be made from one and one-half ounces of cocoanut oil; two and a quarter drams of tincture of nux vomica, one ounce of bay rum and twenty drops of oil of bergamot. This tonic should be thoroughly rubbed with the finger tips into divisions made along the scalp. To apply it every other night is sufficient, and on alternate nights there may be used another formula composed of one dram of alcoholic tincture of cantharides, half a dram of tincture of capsicum, two drams of tincture of nux vomica, three-quarters of an ounce of cocoa oil and two and one-half ounces of cologne.

Nothing will so quickly cause the hair to turn gray as an absence of nourishing oils, and it is for this reason that tonics containing such ingredients are invaluable. When there is a decided tendency to whiteness a formula that has been found useful, if massaged nightly into the head, is one dram each of terebene, borax and sulphur and six ounces of lavender water.

STORAGE OF APPLES.

How to Keep Them In Good Condition In an Apple Cellar.

An apple cellar should be the driest and sweetest corner of the house. Nothing else should ever be stored in it. Its walls should be at least twenty inches thick, and it should have abundant light. All summer it should be open to drafts of air and kept free of any decay.

There should be no moldy boards or any smell of mildew. In other words, the air should be fit to breathe. When the apples are stored the drafts should be stopped, and when steady cold sets in you should shut the cellar tight and let it stay tightly closed until May.

You can place such a cellar as this conveniently under part of your barn or under your carriage house, only there should be no stable adjacent. The floor overhead should be covered with autumn leaves spread thickly to prevent any change of atmosphere below. The thermometer all winter should stand at about 33, just above freezing. Put your apples in shallow bins, cement the floor to keep out rats, and if barrels are used set them up somewhat from the floor.—Outing Magazine.

How to Manage a Life Preserver.

"The worst trouble about a life preserver," said an old sailor, "is that few people know what to do with one when it's thrown to them. Many a man would drown in trying to get a life preserver over his head. The average person struggling about in the water would try to lift up the big life ring and put it over his head. That only causes the man to sink deeper and take more water into his lungs. The proper way to approach a life preserver in the water is to take hold of the side nearest you and press upon it with all your weight. That causes the farther side to fly up in the air and down over your head, 'ringing' you as neatly as a man ringing a cane at a country fair. After that minister drowning man can be rescued."

How to Save In Cutting Goods.

When you wish to know the exact amount of material required for a garment procure sample and width of material from the clerk, then use newspapers the exact width of material; if single width, place pattern on paper, being sure to remember which is up and down of the goods. Use enough newspaper for whole garment and then measure exact amount required is a good plan when expensive material is to be used.

"Possum avenue" is the latest in street names for Washington. Executive avenue is the deceased name of the street separating the treasury building from the White House. The new cognomen is the child of the veteran who guards the treasury department door. He was asked the other day to point out the way to the White House by a party of visitors.

"Step right across Possum avenue and you will be in the White House grounds," he replied.

To School by Air Tube.

"Fifty years from now there will be no schools in Chicago," said Architect Dwight H. Perkins of the Chicago board of education the other day. He meant that conditions in Chicago, particularly transportation, will have changed to such an extent, that the schools will be thirty or forty miles beyond the city limits, far from its smoke, dust, dirt and turmoil and close to nature.

"We will shoot the children out through pneumatic tubes every morning into fields, groves and parks by school," was the architect's enthusiastic prophecy. "And in the evening we will shoot them back again."

NO GROUND FOR DISCOURAGEMENT.

Just because the Missouri, Michigan or New York orchardist reads of fruit returns from the mountain and Pacific coast states far surpassing any he has been able to secure is no reason why he should throw up the sponge, if he feels inclined to do so, and grub out his trees. Rather should he take account of the careful methods by which the western fruit ranchman is able to secure such high returns—namely, painstaking handling of the soil, great care in pruning and spraying, costly thinning, which insures fruit of a proper size, and lastly, and as important as any factor, co-operation in the matter of packing and marketing. Many a New England orchard has been rejuvenated and made immensely profitable by the employment of scientific methods in caring for it, and many another may be made a large source of revenue if handled in the same way. Nearness to market is another factor decidedly to the advantage of the eastern apple grower, as it costs about 30 cents a bushel to land the bushel box of fancy fruit from the Pacific coast in New York or Boston. Let eastern orchard owners make their orchards a primary instead of a second or third rate consideration and give them the attention that the western ranchman does his and they will be surprised at the results.

A NEW MEXICO QUERY.

A lady reader of these notes living near Mountainair, N. M., writes inquiring if strawberries will grow and do well in the rich chocolate soil of that section and if they will need covering during the winter. While the writer is not acquainted personally with the section in question, two or three general statements may be made which will be helpful. In the first place, chocolate soil is usually as rich in fertilizing elements as any other and would seem to be all right for the strawberry. A more important consideration would be sufficient moisture to insure the growth of the plants and the maturing of the fruit, and this would have to be supplied by ditch at needed times if the rainfall were not sufficient. Cultivation should be given often enough to keep the soil mellow and to conserve the moisture. If during the months when the plants were dormant the mercury did not go lower than 10 above zero, the bed would hardly need covering. However, in this connection it is well to keep in mind the fact that it is not degrees of cold that kill berry vines, but alternate thawing and freezing, and local conditions would determine to quite an extent the probable danger from this source.

BLOOD TOLD.

That blood will tell, even in the raising of corn, was nicely illustrated in the case of an Iowa grower who paid $5.35 per bushel for his seed at the time of the corn contest at the State Agricultural college. To prove to his own satisfaction the value of pure bred seed over the best seed selected from common corn, he planted the pure bred seed—Reid's Yellow Dent—in rows alongside the other corn. Both plots had the same stand and received the same cultivation and care. At husking time the pure bred corn yielded at the rate of seventy-one and a half bushels per acre, while the scrub corn gave a return of fifty-nine bushels, a difference of eleven and a half bushels per acre. Since a bushel of corn will plant seven acres it is quite clear that this amount of seed would produce an increased yield equal to seven times that on one acre, or eighty and a half bushels. If this corn was worth 50 cents a bushel, the bushel of seed was worth in crop returns $40.25 more than the common corn. It would be well for the corn grower to have instances of this in mind when he pays a long price for good seed corn next spring.

The great agricultural labor of the coming years will not be devoted to developing virgin lands so much as conserving and restoring the fertility of soils already under cultivation.

The danger of vegetables in the cellar freezing on the severest nights may be reduced by having a tub or two or three pailfuls of water there. Water is more susceptible to the action of frost than vegetables and will therefore freeze first.

Owing to the fact that very many of the Danish cows are tethered while at pasture, their owners drive the water to them instead of driving the cows to water, as is customary in America and some other countries where larger pastures are the rule.

There is probably no factor in the winter feeding of the flock of poultry that has more to do in getting results in eggs than in making the hens scratch for what they get to eat. A loafing hen stuffed chiefly with corn never has laid to speak of in the winter or any other time and never will

THE EVERLASTING RAT PEST.

Considering the enormous loss from the rat pest, placed at $100,000,000 annually in this country alone, every farmer and householder should do all in his power by means of traps, poisons and any other devices to reduce the number of the rodents to a minimum. That the war against them should be unending is indicated from their remarkable prolificacy, the adult female producing an average of ten young ones to the litter and from three to five litters in a season. One of the best methods of slow poisoning is one part of barytes mixed with eight parts of cornmeal and stirred into a stiff dough and portions of it placed where the rats will get hold of it. This has an advantage over strychnine or arsenic in that after getting it the rats have time to leave the buildings in which they happen to be in search of water. Cage and guillotine traps, cats and rat terriers are also effective aids in the work of destruction.

The fact that a fellow names his farm is no proof that he is boastful or stuck on himself, but simply that he considers what he is doing sufficiently worth while so that he is not ashamed to have the public know to whom the place belongs. If a fellow doesn't believe in naming his farm, there is doubtless a practical reason for it that is not far to seek.

The 1909 corn crop is far and away the most valuable ever raised, its worth being placed at $1,720,000,000. While in quantity it is less than the crop of 1906, there was still a total of 2,767,000,000 bushels, which is 3.5 per cent greater than the average for the past five years. The value of the 1909 crop exceeds by 36 per cent the value of the crops for the past five years.

Careful investigations which have been carried on in California in connection with the pear thrips show that from 70 to 73 per cent of the thrips may be destroyed by means of deep plowing in the fall and from 90 to 97 per cent of the remainder by proper spraying under high pressure in a downward direction with a combination spray of dilute tobacco extract and distillate oil emulsion.

The grower of spring or hard wheat on land worth $50 an acre, with a yield that the past year averaged but fifteen bushels per acre in the spring wheat belt, is up against a practical proposition—namely, his returns at prevailing prices after expenses are paid don't leave him a fair return on his investment. He must either raise a variety of wheat that will yield more bushels to the acre or quit raising wheat altogether except in a three or four year rotation.

Every housewife should be in possession of "Care of Food in the Home," a very practical bulletin (farmers' No. 375) by Mrs. Mary Hinman Abel and prepared under the supervision of the office of experiment stations of the department of agriculture at Washington. The publication contains a world of information about a great variety of subjects, while the subject matter is tersely put, and to the point. It may be had free by applying to one's senator or representative at Washington.

One of the chief drawbacks to soil in the orchard or a mulching system which involves a lot of dry litter also at the trees is the danger from fire, especially in the spring, when things have dried out by warm winds and before the green herbage starts. Where it is deemed best for any good reason to keep an orchard in sod this fire danger should be guarded against by having a strip plowed around the orchard, which will stop a fire originating outside, while occasional furrows in the orchard will prevent the spread of a fire from one part of the orchard to another.

It is strange that the stock judges at the big shows don't insist that animals outside of the fat steer class ripe for slaughter should come before them for honors in normal breeding trim instead of the overstuffed, fat and logy condition which characterizes so many animals in the show ring. Especially is this true of the heavier breeds of cattle, which have to be stuffed and polished for weeks and put into an unnatural condition in order to fit them for exhibition. The harm in the system lies in the fact that it gives a wrong impression and leads many a breeder to believe that unless an animal has mountains of fat on it it is not well bred, which is as far as can be from the truth.

John Sandberg of Iowa, whose record of producing 156 bushels of corn per acre the past season was mentioned in these notes, will have to take a back seat for Mr Batts of Wake county, N. C., who the past year raised 226 2-3 bushels on an acre of ground, as certified to by the state commissioner of agriculture and the chairman of the Raleigh board of trade. This corn would not rank high as viewed by corn show standards, but it delivered the goods—the shelled corn. The variety was Cocke's Prolific, which on the acre in question averaged four ears to the stalk, some stalks carrying as many as eight ears. The blue ribbon for the highest yield in Iowa was carried off by a grower in the same county, with 181 bushels.

Neighborhood Notes

A terrible accident occurred at the tannery near Petoskey, in which an employee, John G. Knopp, lost his life. While engaged in building a cover for one of the big leaches, Knopp fell into the tank of hot liquor used in the process of tanning, and was so horribly burned that he lived but five hours after the accident. A companion who was working with Knapp pulled him out but not before the burning fluid had done its deadly work. The young man was a son of Mr. and Mrs. Adam Kopp, who reside in the Greenwood neighborhood east of Petoskey.

Northport will bond for $12,000 for a new school building.

A number of men from Walloon Lake who went to Flint about six weeks ago have returned, stating that they could not stand the cold weather prevailing at Flint, and say that if they had to freeze to death they prefer to be at home where they will get a decent burial.—Petoskey Record.

Through the efforts of the state dairy and food department wholesale milk and adulteration has been brought to light. In December State Analysis, S. W. Robison went to Ubly to make an investigation, and as a result seventy-one farmers have been arrested for selling milk below the standard. Prosecutions were started against sixty-six, and of those all but one pleaded guilty. They paid fines of $25 each and costs.

Eighty-seven samples were taken and all of these, with the exception of five were below grade. In one can there was ten gallons of milk and twenty gallons of water.

The Boyne City Lumber company has concluded the purchase, from the W. H. White Co., of ten thousand acres of choice timber land. The land lies east of Atlanta, mostly in Montmorency county and the timber will all be brought to Boyne City and cut in their big mill at this place. This insures a long run for this company, for, added to their other holdings this means a big lot of timber and a cut that will extend over many years.—Boyne City Journal.

After the middle of April, 1910, the town of Wetzell will hardly be a spot on the map. At that time the turning works will close down for good. Mr. Harding who owns the factory, says the mill will undoubtedly be torn down. The mill was built twenty three years ago and has run very steady.

Mr. Harding is not going to be down now with his wealth but has gone into the fruit business which he claims will be better in Antrim county than lumbering ever was. He is buying several farms and has a good many sections of land all ready and is going into the general fruit raising. If all of the lumbermen were as public spirited as Frank Harding the county would lose nothing by having the timber cut off but the land would be worth more with the fruit on it than it was before with the timber.

The mill is the only industry at Wetzell and when it closes down the general store of Wisler & Co. which has furnished the town with the necessaries of life, will be moved to Mancelona. This will leave nothing but the postoffice and some houses in Wetzell.

United States Secret Service Agent Elmer A. Gorman seized a dray load of catalogues issued by a big Detroit factory and showing a hand clutching a number of paper bills. The plates also were confiscated, the loss to the manufacturer being about $1,000. He will not be prosecuted, but the Chicago engraver who is said to have assisted the Detroiter the plate was not a violation may be. It is against the law to reproduce in any form or picture a likeness of Uncle Sam's currency. Several recent examples in Detroit have come to the notice of Gorman.

A Tuberculosis Experiment

"A very interesting experiment was started by a friend of mine, Doctor Pratt of Boston—the tuberculosis class in connection with a church," says Dr. William Osler in Woman's Home Companion for February. "It is a nice sort of practical religion for any church to undertake. Doctor Pratt's first class consisted of fifteen or twenty persons, chiefly young clerks, all in the early stage of the disease, and all still at work. He met them once a week in a room off the schoolroom of the church, and there they discussed their cases with him. They were weighed every week, a careful analysis was made of their symptoms—how much they had gained, or how much they had lost. Each one took his own temperature and brought his note book, and it is a remarkable record of several years work that has been carried on. A number of those young persons, some with quite well marked symptoms of the disease have been completely cured without going to a sanitorium, without going away and while continuing their work. I know of no more encouraging feature in connection with this disease than this practical experiment, which has been carried out so successfully."

NO REASON FOR ALARM

One word in conclusion on a troublesome point about which we physicians have to worry a great deal and the public still more. One often hears the statement: "All this fuss about tuberculosis is terrible for the poor victims who are made social outcasts, to their great distress and to the alarm of their families." There is no justification for this feeling.

There is no risk in close contact with tuberculosis if the patient is ordinarily careful about the sputum. If one is morbidly afraid of the disease and desires a place of safety where one can get away from its germs, go to some first class sanatorium for the tuberculosis. There are fewer germs there in the air and on the floor than in any other place in the country, and there is very little risk of catching the disease in the house of a tuberculous patient if he takes good care of the sputum, and sees that it is properly disinfected. Dr. William Osler in Woman's Home Companion for February.

A STARTLING STATEMENT

New York Medical Authorities Claim Dyspepsia to be a Pre-Disposing Cause for Consumption.

The post mortem statistics of the big New York hospitals show that some cases of consumption are due, at least indirectly to unchecked dyspepsia, especially when the victim was predisposed to tuberculosis.

Dyspepsia wears out the body and and brain. The weakened, irritable stomach being unable to digest food the body does not receive the required nourishment, and the victim becomes thin, weak and haggard. As a result, the body becomes a fertile field in which the germs of disease may lodge and flourish.

Therefore, the person who permits dyspepsia to progress unhindered is guilty of contributing toward the development of one of the most insidious and fatal diseases known to mankind.

Dyspepsia may be completely eradicated if properly treated. We sell a remedy that we positively guarantee will completely relieve indigestion or dyspepsia, or the medicine used during the trial will cost the user nothing.

This remedy has been named Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets. Certainly no offer could be more fair, and our offer should be proof positive that Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are a dependable remedy.

Inasmuch as the medicine will cost you nothing if it does not benefit you, we urge you who are suffering with indigestion or dyspepsia to try Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets. A 25-cent box contains enough medicine for fifteen day's treatment. For chronic cases we have two larger sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store. The Rexall Store. The Ivy Drug Store, A. H. Fletcher, proprietor.

coustituted the rank and file at that moment in town. A little later, when all the drives on the river should be in and those of its tributaries and the men still tingering at the woods camps, at least 500 woods weary men would be turned loose. Then Hell's Half Mile would awaken in earnest from its hibernation. The lights would blaze from day to day. From its open windows would blare the music, the cries of men and women, the shuffle of feet, the noise of fighting, the shrieks of wild laughter, curses deep and frank and unashamed, songs broken and interrupted. Crews of men, arms locked, would surge up and down the narrow sidewalks, their little felt hats cocked one side, their heads back, their fearless eyes challenging the devil and all his works—and getting the challenge accepted. Girls would flit across the lit windows like shadows before flames or stand in the doorways hailing the men jovially by name.

Tonight, however, the street was comparatively quiet. The saloons were of modified illumination. The barkeepers were listlessly wiping the bars. The "pretty waiter girls" gossiped with each other and yawned behind their hands.

In the middle of the third block Orde wheeled sharp to the left down a dark and dangerous looking alley. Another turn to the right brought him into a very narrow street where stood a three story wooden structure into which led a high arched entrance. This was McNeill's.

A figure detached itself from the shadow. Orde uttered an exclamation.

"You here, Newmark?" he cried.

"Yes," replied that young man. "I want to see this through."

"With those clothes?" marveled Orde. "It's a wonder some of these things haven't held you up long ago. It's dangerous. You're likely to get slugged."

"I can stand it if you can," returned Newmark.

McNeill's lower story was given over entirely to drinking. The second floor was a theater and the third a dance hall. Beneath the building were still viler depths. From this basement the riverman and the shanty boy generally graduated penniless and perhaps unconscious to the street. Now, your lumberjack did not customarily arrive at this stage without lively doings en route; therefore McNeill's maintained a force of fighters. They were burly, sodden men, but strong in their experience and their discipline. To be sure, they might not last quite as long as their antagonists could, but they always lasted plenty long enough. Sand bags and brass knuckles helped some and team work finished the job.

Orde and his men entered the lower hall as though sauntering in without definite aim. The river boss wandered about with the rest, a wide, good natured smile on his face.

Presently he found himself at the table of the three card monte men. The rest of his party gravitated in his direction.

"Do you think you could pick out the jack when I throw these out like this?" asked the dealer.

"Sure! She's that one."

"Well," exclaimed the gambler, "danged if you didn't! I bet you $5 you can't do it again."

Again Orde was permitted to pick up the jack.

"You've got the best eye that's been in this place since I got here," exclaimed the dealer. "Here, Dennis," said he to his partner, "You try him."

Dennis obligingly took the cards and lost. By this time the men, augmented by the idlers, had drawn close.

Whether it was that the gamblers sensed the fact that Orde might be led to plunge or whether they were using him to draw the crowd into their game it would be difficult to say, but twice more they permitted him to win.

"Sure! She's that one."

Newmark plucked his sleeve.

"You're $20 ahead," he muttered. "Quit it."

"What limit do you put on this game anyway?" asked Orde.

"How much do you want to bet?"

"Would you stand for $500?" asked Orde.

The gambler pretended to deliberate, his cool, shifty eyes running over the group before him. A small door immediately behind him swung slowly ajar an inch or so.

"Got the money?" he asked.

"Have you?" countered Orde.

The man nodded. "I'll go you, bub," said he. "Lay out your money."

Orde counted out nine fifty-dollar bills and five tens.

"All right," said the gambler, taking up the cards.

"Hold on!" cried Orde. "Where's yours?"

"Oh, that's all right," the gambler reassured him. "I'm with the house. McNeill's credit is good."

"I'm putting up my good money, and I expect to see good money put up in return," said Orde.

Finally the gamblers yielded and put up the money.

The audience now consisted of the dozen of Orde's friends, nearly twice as many rivermen, eight hangers-on of the joint, probably fighters and "bouncers;" half a dozen professional gamblers and several waitresses. The four barkeepers still held their positions. The rivermen were scattered back of Orde, although Orde's own friends had gathered at his shoulder. The mercenaries and gamblers had divided and flanked the table at either side. Newmark, a growing wonder and disgust creeping into his usually inexpressive face, recognized the strategic advantage of this arrangement. A determined push would separate the rivermen from the gamblers long enough for the latter to disappear through the small door at the back.

A gasp of anticipation went up as coolly the gambler made his passes. Orde planted his great red fist on one of the cards.

"That is the jack!" he cried.

"Oh, is it?" sneered the dealer. "Well, turn it over and let's see."

"No!" roared Orde. "You turn over the other two!"

A low oath broke from the gambler, and his face contorted in a spasm. For a moment the situation was tense and threatening. The dealer, with a sweeping glance, again searched the faces of those before him. In that moment probably he made up his mind that an open scandal must be avoided. Force and broken bones, even murder, might be all right enough under color of right. If Orde had turned up for a jack the card on which he now held his fist and then had attempted to prove cheating a cry of robbery and a lively fight would have given opportunity for making way with the stakes. But McNeill's could not afford to be shown up before thirty interested rivermen as running an open and shut brace game.

"That isn't the way this game is played," said the gambler. "Show up your jack."

"It's the way I play it," replied Orde sternly. "These gentlemen heard the bet." He reached over and dexterously flipped over the other two cards. "You see, neither of these is the jack. This must be."

"You win," assented the gambler after a pause.

Orde, his fist still on the third card, began pocketing the stakes with the other hand. The gambler reached across the table.

"Give me the other card," said he.

Orde picked it up, laughing. For a moment he seemed to hesitate, holding the bit of pasteboard tantalizingly outstretched, as though he was going to turn also this one face up. Then quite deliberately he handed the card to the gambler.

"All to the bar!" yelled Orde.

Orde poured his drink on the floor and took the glass belonging to the man next him.

"Get them to give you another, Tim," said he. "No knockout drops if I can help it."

"Tim," said Orde, low voiced, "get the crowd together and we'll pull out. I've a thousand dollars on me, and they'll sandbag me sure if I go alone. And let's get out right off."

THE SWINEHERD

Young pigs should be taught to eat early. Then one can gradually increase the grain ration and keep their development at a high standard.

Cheap Ration For Brood Sows.

A cheap and at the same time substantial ration for brood sows at the present price of feed is a mixture of half corn and half bran and shorts.

The Curl in the Pig's Tail.

The curl of a pig's tail is an indication of good health. When the curl begins to straighten out look for disease and give medicine or a change of food.

Good Feed For Hogs.

It has been shown by careful experiments that four and one-half pounds of potatoes when cooked are equal to one pound of cornmeal for fattening.

Get Rid of the Brutal Hired Man.

Watch the hired man when he is tending to the stock. If he is rough and brutal you can well dispense with his services, for the animals will not thrive under his care.

Uniformity In Swine.

The herd of swine should be of uniform color and the lots of swine for market should be of as near uniform size and shape and color as possible. The packers pay more for this kind of hogs.

Cottage Cheese and Buttermilk.

These when made as herein described not only have a high food value, but possess tonic or medicinal qualities which are especially beneficial during warm weather. The food value of cottage cheese is approximately the same as that of beefsteak, pound for pound, and as for buttermilk, two quarts of this may be considered fully equal to one pound of beefsteak. Thus it will be seen that cottage cheese at 15 cents per pound and buttermilk at 7 cents per quart are no more expensive than steak at 15 cents per pound.

HARNESS FOR OXEN.

Humane Device to Take the Place of the Heavy Wooden Yoke.

In many countries of Europe, where oxen are still used to a great extent in farm work, a crusade of considerable magnitude has been started against the ancient practice of harnessing the animals together by a heavy wooden yoke, and in France the device herewith shown is recommended in its stead.

It is a bar of curved wood or of flexible steel provided with soft pads and made fast to the forehead just between the roots of the horns, thus transferring the pulling strain from the neck and shoulders to the head. Leather straps or iron chains lead from the head yokes to the implement or wagon being pulled. The arrangement allows of the yoking of one animal or a pair of them to shafts or poles of the nature used in attaching horses to vehicles or the pairing of them together side by side or in file without shafts or poles for tilling the soil.

It is claimed that with the old fashioned wooden yoke the ground must be level and the oxen of exactly the same size and strength or one or the other of the animals will suffer torture in pulling. With the new method the pulling force is claimed to be always normal for each animal, no matter what may be the condition of the ground or the difference in the power and size of the animals yoked together. Experiments show that oxen so hitched together can do double the work possible with the cumbersome yoke ordinarily used.—Popular Mechanics.

ARMS OF CRIMINALS.

French Scientist Finds They Are Shorter Than the Normal.

A French scientist, Dr. Perrier, has been investigating the question whether criminals have longer arms than the more law abiding members of the community, that is to say, to what extent, if any, they approach in length of arm the negro and anthropoid ape types. The results obtained are interesting because they indicate just the opposite to what might have been expected. Dr. Perrier premises that in Europe a normally proportioned man can stretch with arms extended about two and a half inches more than his height. Out of 856 prisoners at the Nimes prison who were examined he found 11 per cent could not stretch their own height—i. e., had arms much shorter than usual—in 3 per cent the measurements were the same, and in 86 per cent the arm stretch exceeded the height by from one to two inches, or, in other words, their arms were also slightly shorter than the normal.

Vagrants were found to have very short arms. Murderers had arms slightly short or normal length. Those convicted of theft and "moral" crimes approached more nearly to the normal standard—while colonels, on the contrary, were mostly remarkable for very short arms. Married criminals have more normal proportions than the single people. It suggests possibly that the single man is a born criminal, while the married man has been forced into crime through the exactions of, of which his partner may be one.

Pig Iron by Electricity.

The chief of the article in the Engineering Magazine deals with the interesting process developed up by the possibility of producing pig iron electrically in considerable quantities as demonstrated by recent successes in Sweden, where it is stated, various works are putting the Gronwall-Lindblad-Stalhane process to practical use. According to the authority named, the cost of producing pig iron by electricity is 16 per cent less than that obtained by ordinary smelting methods.

New Turbine Engine.

Consul Frederick I. Bright of Huddersfield quotes a British newspaper statement that an Italian engineer has invented a reversible turbine engine. The advantages claimed for the engine are that "there are no blades or vanes to break or get out of order," that "it will work with equal power or speed in both directions, forward or reverse," and that "it can be built in all sizes, from five horsepower to 50,000 horsepower."

Corn Silage.

Corn silage is about the cheapest and most efficient to supplement the winter ration for dairy and beef cattle, horses, calves and sheep. It is cheaper to handle the corn crop in the form of silage than any other way. And should there be another summer of little rain the well stocked silo furnishes succulent green feed and comes as a great relief to the husbandman.

ARGO MILLING COMPANY

Courier Grange Column

Marion Center Grange No. 956, was organized at Marion town hall February 1, 1902, by E. B. Ward, with forty charter members. E. B. Ward was elected the first Master, Mrs. Ingalls, Secretary and Ida Ward, Lecturer. The next important date the history of Marion Center Grange occurred December 27, 1905, when the committee reported the purchase of a lot, upon which the grange could erect a home. October 31, 1906, the building committee reported that work had been commenced on the hall. June 25, 1909, the records show the first meeting held in the new hall which is one of the finest halls in the state. It is built of cement blocks with a complete kitchen and dining room in the basement. While all the members should be given due credit for the grange hall which they have builded, the ladies auxiliary should be given the lion's share.

Throughout the records from the first meeting, the names of Ward, Burns, Withers, Walter and Henry Black, Shapton, George, James and W. J. Meggison, Elmer Ingalls and others are always found at the front in pushing the work of the grange. E. B. Ward, who organized the grange and was its first Master, continued in that position until last January when he voluntarily retired. William Withers, one of the solid farmers of Marion, being elected in his place.

Marion Center grange has always been active in grange works and with a fine hall, hustling members imbued with the true grange spirit has a great past and a bright promise for the future.

Resolutions of Respect.

To the Officers and Members of White Rose Hive No. 143:

Whereas in a mysterious providence of God, death has come suddenly and removed from our midst our sister, Sarah Colvin, and left us with saddened hearts to mourn her departure, therefore,

Resolved, that we bow submissively to the will of God and say, "Father, Thou knowest best," that we fondly cherish in our memories the spirit of kindness which always characterized our departed sister; that we tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved children and that we commend them to the care of Him who said, "What I do thou knowest not but thou shalt know hereafter."

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family and that they be placed on the record book of our Hive.

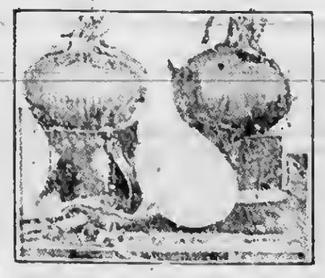
ONIONS FOR SOUVENIRS.

Some Huge Specimens That Weighed Two Pounds Each.

The onions shown in the illustration are the Bermuda or Giant Gibraltar species. They were grown on Long Island, New York, and weigh two pounds each. Twenty-eight of them make a bushel. They were raised from Gibraltar seed and matured in the open. The onions are so large that one of them fills a quart basket and more, and they ran 1,035 bushels to the acre.

The cost of raising an acre of onions is something which is not an easy thing to get at and varies with every onion raiser on every acre every year and will continue to do so as long as nature sees fit to absolutely decline to run on any set schedule which shall not vary one iota from year to year, and nature has so declined since the creation of the world. Further, even the same year upon contiguous acres the cost per acre to John Smith will vary greatly from that of the cost to friend Bill Jones or Jack Robinson. This will continue until such time as human beings become exactly similar in stature, in weight, in temperament and in sensitory attributes.



GIANT GIBRALTAR ONIONS.

While these were by no means the largest onions grown from seed, they were what would be called firsts by sorters. The largest onions were sent to Long Island's county and outside fairs at which the experimental stations have wide exhibits, and many of our largest Giants have been begged by visitors who wished them for souvenirs.

It is needless to explain that this superb Gibraltar onion will not be sold at any of the prices doled out by the controllers of food supply, because such superb examples of vegetable growth are eagerly sought for and very high prices paid by hotel epicurean establishments, private and public, in great cities.

Onions from these seeds grew 50 to the measured bushel; selected onions, 28 to the measured bushel; unsorted onions weighed 52 pounds to bushel; selected onions weighed 55 pounds to bushel; height or thickness, average 4 inches; flattest, 3½ inches; most globular, 4¼ inches; circumference, average 16 2-3 inches; greatest, 19½ inches; least, 15¾ inches; weight, average 2 pounds; heaviest, 2¾ pounds; lightest, 1¾ pounds.

The Fool and the Auto.

If a man should put rubber tires on the wheels of a locomotive and drive the same at express speed or anywhere near it over an ordinary wagon road he would be pronounced a suicidal lunatic, says an exchange. Yet this is exactly what men presumably of sound mind are doing every day with their motorcars. An automobile is practically a locomotive, and, like the latter, it can be driven with safety at any speed faster than a jog trot only on a specially prepared track free from obstructions that might derail it, ditch it or cause it to collide with rocks, telegraph poles and other things by the roadside. An elaborate system of signals is required to prevent collisions between locomotives on the rails, but our road locomotives zigzag over uneven and treacherous roadbeds, turn "hairpin" curves on steep grades and take a hundred other chances that would make a railroad engineer's hair stand on end. The daily bulletin of automobile fatalities ought to bring the conviction that common roads are not built for running locomotives at even the lowest speed now authorized by law and that the regulation of automobiles needs to be made stricter and unflinchingly enforced rather than liberalized.

Onion Queen of Northwest.

Miss Alice Turner of Dayton, Wash., is being dubbed the onion queen of the Pacific northwest. Last season she planted and harvested ten acres of onions and cleared above all her expenses $8,330. The crop was an increase one, being raised on new land and watered with artesian well water. Miss Turner came into possession of a small farm by the death of her father a year ago. She was at a loss to know what to do with the old home and her mother, when she decided to become an onion grower all by herself. She engaged men to plow and plant her acreage to onion seed and throughout the summer superintended the weeding and watering of the crop. In spite of many scoffings from neighbors, who declared onions would be worthless last fall, she persevered and now is envied by all. The total crop was purchased by a New York commission man for distribution to merchants in the east. Miss Turner realized 75 cents a sack for the onions, which yielded nearly 1,000 sacks an acre.

Origin of Flower Names.

It is interesting to know how certain flowers got their names. Many were named after individuals. For instance, fuchsias were so called because they were discovered by Leonard Fuchs. Dahlias were named for Andre Dahl, who brought them from Peru. The camellia was so called for a missionary named Kamel, who brought some magnificent specimens of the flower to France from Japan. He called it the Rose of Japan, but his friends changed it to camellia. Magnolias were named in honor of Professor Magnol de Montpellier, who first brought the beautiful tree to France from America and Asia. Because they trembled with the wind is the meaning of anemones. The Latin word to wash is lavare, and lavender received its name because the Romans put the flowers into the water when they washed to perfume their hands.

A Palace of Pumpkins.

The illustration shows an exhibit of pumpkins as it was seen at an Ohio agricultural fair last fall in Hillsboro. The "palace" was so large that refreshments were served inside of it. The pumpkins were arranged in colors and shapes so as to make a very attractive display. At Independence, Mo., a similar "palace" was erected and on the last day a band of famous colored cooks took possession and turned pumpkins into pies, thousands of which were given away. Doubtless these cooks impressed the value of the pumpkin crop upon the people deeper than any scientific agriculturist could have done.

A Good Fertilizer.

The value of sulphate of ammonia as a fertilizer was demonstrated in some German tests where marsh lands were fertilized with nitrate of soda and sulphate of ammonia. With both oats and beets the plants receiving sulphate yielded much more than those receiving nitrate. These results indicate that on marsh lands a liberal supply of the sulphate of ammonia may be advantageously substituted for nitrate of soda and confirms the wisdom of the practice in Germany.

The fixing of freight rates is dependent upon competition in the first instance. When that factor is eliminated or modified the length of the haul and the possibility of moving the product by all or partial water route becomes effective. The available rate on western products is a factor in placing the products of Kansas and Iowa in the markets of the world under advantageous circumstances, and in view of the fact that one ton of coal will move a given volume of freight six miles on water to one mile on land it is evident that no section of the country would long contemplate with favor the transportation of its products to the point of consumption entirely by the too costly rail process.—Bookkeeper.

The Passing of Saloons

Internal revenue figures from Washington show that there are twelve thousand fewer saloons in the United States than there were twelve months ago. This means the closing of an average of one thousand saloons every month, or 33½ every day. Hail to the prohibition movement!

At the same time, there has been a reduction of 980 in the number of wholesale liquor dealers, of 75 in the number of distilleries and over 100 in the number of brewers. Hail to the prohibition movement!

During the year there has likewise been a decided toning up of sentiment among the liquor men themselves as to the laws which should govern saloons, and also as to the manner in which saloons should be conducted, all of which is a distinct tribute to the force of the prohibition movement.

What a pity that president Taft, in his annual message, did not avail himself of these significant facts to speak a fitting word for the temperance reform, just as he did for the opium reform, and thus create a happy and valuable precedent for future presidents to follow. We count it nothing less than a disgrace that for a full century past no American chief magistrate, in addressing the lawmakers of the nation, has cared or dared to make even a reference to this mighty temperance movement.

It is with no personal animus against President Taft that we utter these words. He appears to be a fair-minded man. His outspoken friendliness toward missions, denominational colleges and other good movements—shows that his heart is generally on the right side, but his subservency to the liquor interests, like that of other magistrates before him, prevents the utterance of one emphatic word in support of the greatest reform of the ages.

Some day we shall have a president who will break this unhappy precedent and say things which will make saloon men wince and temperance men shout, and that day may not be as far off as some people imagine either.

One of the most prominent facts brought out at the Farmer's Institute was the necessity of spraying. The Spraymotor Company of Buffalo, have placed an exhibit in our show rooms. Call and see it.

FRUIT GROWERS ASSOCIATION

Held Successful Meeting at East Jordan

W. P. SQUIRES ELECTED PRESIDENT

J. H. Milford Secretary—Temporary Directors Made Permanent

Next Meeting Will be Held at Charlevoix the First Tuesday in March—Pruning and Spraying Will be Discussed.

The second meeting of the Charlevoix County Fruit Growers Association was called to order in the Votruba hall in East Jordan at 2:00 p. m., by the temporary chairman, W. P. Squires, with sixty farmers and fruit growers present.

After the reading of the minutes of the former meeting, the first order of business was the perfecting of a permanent organization and the following officers were elected to serve until January 1, 1911:

President—W. P. Squier.

Vice Presidents—Fred Wagner, A. F. Bridge, H. L. Olney.

Secretary—J. H. Milford.

Treasurer—D. S. Payton.

Directors—Martin Ruhling, A. F. Darbee, William Withers, Jasper Warden, E. E. Stroud, L. F. Knowles and E. B. Ward.

It was decided to hold a meeting each month, alternating between Charlevoix, Boyne City and East Jordan.

The next meeting will be held in Charlevoix on the first Tuesday in March and one in Boyne City on the first Tuesday in April.

Pruning and spraying will be discussed at the meeting at Charlevoix and a subject for the next meeting will be decided upon at the Charlevoix meeting.

The dues of the association were placed at 50 cents per year.

In answer to the question, "What Slope is Best for Fruit?" a prominent and successful fruit grower replied that the slope of the man was more important than the slope of the land and the farmers of Charlevoix county are determined to get the proper slope, hence the organization of this society. The aim is educational and every one who is interested in better farm methods, is invited to become a member of the society and to attend the meetings and ask questions and take part in the discussions.

After the business of the meeting was concluded the topic, "What Kinds of Fruit and What Varieties of Each Should Northern Michigan Attempt to Grow?", was taken up and discussed.

As the fruit tree agent is busy at this season, this was a very important topic. A suggestion was made that we ask the legislature to pass a law permitting farmers to hang agents and nursery men, who delivered trees that were not true to name. No committee was appointed to wait on our representative in the interest of such a law but all were urged to be careful in this matter and to deal with the most responsible firms.

It will be impossible to mention here all of the good points that were brought out in the discussion.

Mr. Withers of Marion says that he has too many varieties in his orchard. Says four good ones will be plenty for the average orchard. Likes King apple best. Names Snow, Wealthy, Wagner and Duchess as good ones. For an early apple says that Duchess cannot be beaten.

He says that cherries are also a sure and profitable crop with him. Recommends Windsor and Smith's Bigganeau as best varieties for this section. Says that sweet cherries do well for local markets but that they will not ship well and advises against planting too many of them.

He says he grows some peaches but finds it necessary to cut back half of the year's growth in order to get good peaches. Likes Alberta peach better than any other variety he has.

Mr. Olney of South Arm is a peach grower. He mentions the Kalamazoo as perhaps his best variety but has good words for the Fitzgerald, Early Crawford, Champion and Triumph.

Says Triumph will overbear unless properly thinned. Says that air drainage is perhaps the most important thing in the selection of a site for a peach orchard. Mentioned the fact that even a slight depression in the land though located on an elevation will form a receptable into which the cold air will settle and kill both the buds and trees.

Says east slope is most likely to avoid late spring frosts but that it has its danger in making the crop too late in the fall for profit in this part of the state. Says that late varieties in particular should not be planted on north or east slopes.

Mr. Richardson made some amusing references to the Ben Davis apple, he having an orchard of 100 trees of this variety.

Does not recommend planting this variety but says that if you have good trees of this sort to take good care of them and that there are two ways in which you may derive a profit.

First, they are excellent trees to graft, being hardy and long lived. By grafting a variety that you know to be good on a Ben Davis you may soon have a very profitable tree.

Second, they are one of the surest bearers and by taking proper care of the fruit one is sure to reap a good profit some time the next summer after all other apples are gone.

Mr. Burns of Marion mentioned the Stark apple as one that would stand wind storms excellently on account of the fact that they grow on the inner parts of the tree. While not a grape grower he gave some very interesting facts about the grape business and thinks that grapes will do well here and that they may be profitably raised.

Mr. Clark of Eveline gave a very interesting talk on the matter of tree breeding. Says that to graft from prolific bearing trees will aid greatly in securing prolific trees.

He asked the opinion of some of the big shippers as to the best varieties for this locality and was told that Duchess, Wagner, Spitzenberg must be thinned to be marketable. Spies and Greenings were perhaps the best varieties. Mentioned the McIntyre Red, similar to the Snow as an excellent early variety.

Mr. Clark spoke favorably regarding the growing of small fruits and gave some statistics regarding the canning factory at Hart.

This factory paid to the farmers in the vicinity where located $1,200,000 dollars tone million, two hundred thousand dollars, for small fruits during the past season. Charlevoix ought to have such a factory and as our land will do its part it is up to the farmer to look into the possibilities of the small fruit industry.

Many other good reports were brought out but our report is already long and we will not mention more.

We hope to see a large attendance at Charlevoix on March 1, and know that these meetings will prove interesting and valuable to those who attend.

The second number on the lecture course will be given on Friday night at 8:00 p. m., at the Baptist church and instead of Maurice Penfield Fikes, D. D., as previously arranged and announced Hon. Carl D. Thompson of Milwaukee will lecture on "The Fulfillment of Democracy." This change of speakers for this occasion is brought about by a recent telegram from Dr. Fikes announcing his inability to meet his engagement here on account of the death of his mother. It is hoped however to have him with us at a later date.

Hon. Thompson is most strongly and highly recommended as he Iowa:

The Century Lyceum Bureau says: "His lecture is replete with facts, ideals and patriotism; and fairly on fire with an enthusiasm for humanity."

Judge Landsey of Colorado says: "In my judgment Hon. Carl D. Thompson is one of the most entertaining and powerful platform men in this country. He ranks at the very top with these men who are giving their whole heart and soul to the fight for justice."

Opie Reed says, "The best lecture on the subject I ever heard. It was clean and masterly."

A SHORT SESSION

No Cases Were Ready for Trial This Term

Swift Case Will be Tried March 28 Probationers Doing Well.

Circuit Court met in regular session Monday morning but nothing much was done. The forenoon was taken up with the calling of cases and the reports of probation officers. All offenders who are out on probation, were reported as doing well and making a good record. The judge explained the probation law and announced that hereafter he would require the probationers to have a small bank account before their names were taken off the calendar.

After running over the calendar it was found that no cases were ready for trial, a change of venue being asked for in the Swift and Cullen cases, which was denied. The trial of the Swift case was set for the 28th of March. Mr. Cullen pleaded guilty to the charges against him, sentence being deferred until February 28.

ALFALFA GROWING

Director Shaw Writes Interestingly on Alfalfa Crops.

There is a testimony which seems to indicate that the growing of alfalfa is to be a much more important industry in western Michigan in the future than it is at the present. For this reason, the remarks of R. S. Shaw, director of the experimem station connected with the Michigan Agricultural college, are of exceptional interest.

"In selecting a suitable site for alfalfa growing avoid the low-lying, wet, cold land with water level nearer than five or six feet of the surface. Also avoid high, wet lands, such as sleepy hillsides. It is desirable, as far as practicable, to grow alfalfa on lands not suited to cereal crops production, such as the lighter sandy and gravelly areas and high, barren hills and ridges; for there is a possibility of utilizing these lands in this way while other crops may not be profitable. Alfalfa should be regarded as a permanent crop too valuable to use in a short rotation to be plowed under after two or three years, in the same manner as clover. Where clover succeeds well and the crop rotation is a short one it should be used.

"In general the most suitable alfalfa soils are those of the deep, rich, loamy, or sandy loam types. Muck soils do not seem to be satisfactory. The results from clay soils seems to be variable.

"Alfalfa can be grown quite successfully of sandy and gravelly soils, even though these soils are lacking in humus and certain elements of plant food. The chief difficulty in connection with these soils is to get the alfalfa well started, but when once started on these conditions, the crop will do better than any cereal or grass crop that could be used."

ORLOWSKI---MADILL

Popular Young Couple Married Monday Morning at St. Mary's Church.

The marriage of Miss E Josephine Orlowski to Robert G. Madill of this city was celebrated Monday morning at St. Mary's Catholic church. Rev. Fr. Anastastus Rhode performed the ceremony.

The bride was daintily gowned in pale pink messaline over white taffeta and carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses and lillies of the valley and was attended by Miss Anna Madill, sister of the groom, who wore cream silk and carried pink American beauty roses.

The groom was attended by J. J. Sadler. Both of the young people are popular among a large circle of friends in this city, who extend their heartiest congratulations, together with the COURIER.

Mr. and Mrs. Madill left Monday morning for a short wedding trip to Grand Rapids and Detroit. They

NOT A CANDIDATE

N. P. Hull Will Not Make Try for Lieutenant Governor

Senator Dickinson and Colon C. Lillie are Active Candidates.

Last week the state papers announced that N. P. Hull, Master of the Michigan State grange, would be a candidate for the Republican nomination for Lieutenant-Governor. Mr. Hull disposes of the statement in the following words:

"I have never had such an intention," says Mr. Hull "and, if I had, my position in the grange would not allow it, as it would clearly be a case of trading on my office in the grange. And in any event I would not get in after Colon C. Lillie announced his candidacy, as Mr. Lillie is my friend and has my personal support."

So far only two candidates are in the field, Senator Loren D. Dickinson of Eaton, and Colon C. Lillie of Ottawa. Both gentlemen are well known in Charlevoix county and will receive warm support from their friends. Mr. Dickinson as a representative and senator, has always been found on the people's side of every question, and goes before the people with a splendid record as a public servant. Mr. Lillie is best known among the dairymen of the state, an industry which he has done much to foster. He is a good mixer and would fill the position to the entire satisfaction of the people.

MULE RAISING IS PROFITABLE.

Mule raising is fast becoming a large and most important industry throughout the United States, and it may be said that it is one of the principal live stock industries in certain sections—namely, Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Indiana, Illinois and Virginia.

While in the states where the largest number of mules are raised the conditions are well suited for the industry, there is nothing to make it a special business more than could be done in a number of other states, except that the farmers got into the business long ago, and it proved contagious and spread over a considerable territory, and dealers, finding it out, naturally went there to buy them.

On the other hand, horse colts are raised to a considerable extent in all the states where the conditions are favorable to live stock growing. If many of the mares used as brood mares in different states for producing horse colts were bred to jacks instead of stallions it would be found more profitable and in every way more satisfactory. This idea was suggested by a well known breeder for the benefit of any who are doing anything in the way of raising horse colts, for the reason that he believes mule colts will be found more profitable to any owner of good sized mares that will foal colts that have the qualities to make them salable.

Mule colts have decided advantages over horse colts in a general way. We all know that at the present time a horse colt or a young horse to be salable at a profit must possess some qualities of high character. Good drivers, good saddlers, good draft horses and some other classes, as army horses, will sell at a profit, but "plugs" are not wanted at figures that pay to raise them.

Of course there may be "plug" mules as well as "plug" horses, and no doubt they will average less profitable than "plug" horses. Small and crooked mules cannot be made to pay any profit in any region where it costs a reasonable amount to raise a colt. So in breeding mares for mules it is foolish to use small and defective mares or to use a small and inferior jack.

Any man who has enough land of the kind to make grass will in almost any state now find mule raising very profitable if he will get the right sort of mares and keep the colts growing right along till they make the necessary size. The mares must be of good size. The mule will be sure to get his size from his dam, and if he is kept growing right along he will be good for a fair price as a two-year-old and for a better one at three. And yet the cost will not be more than that of a steer of the same age.

BIG HEADED VIRGINIA MULES.
(From Breeder's Gazette, Chicago.)

Feeding is another important factor in mule raising. Either corn or oats are good feed to use with alfalfa hay. They will give better results if used together than if either one is fed alone. If the mules do not seem to eat as much as they should, mix shelled corn and oats in equal parts by weight and grind them. Feed only a little ground feed at first and gradually increase it as they get accustomed to the change. Some of the mules may not eat any more of the ground feed than of the whole corn and oats, but what they do eat will do them more good. A little blackstrap molasses mixed with the grain would make it more palatable after they once become used to it, increasing the consumption of feed and consequently making faster gains. If the mules have any tendency to scour at work the main grain reliance should be oats, or a little of some other kind of hay might be fed with the alfalfa.

The Value of the Separator.

The value of the cream separator is based on the amount it saves out of the loss of the cream that is common under the old or primitive methods. Usually there is a loss of from 25 to 60 per cent of the cream. The cream separator saves this loss, and, computing that under the average price of butter fat the cream separator will save the farmer $10 or more a cow per year, so we see that if a farmer milks five or six cows he saves enough in one year to buy a cream separator above the old methods. Many of the hardware dealers who are separator agents have said to me frequently that they are always pleased to sell a cream separator to the farmer because it brought them into closer relation or to a better friendship than any other commodity they could sell.

In Monday's Evening Press it states that the good people of our great city, Chicago, will vote on the local option question in April. Wonders will never cease.

Albert Byer's, while going across Hammond's lake with a load of logs broke through the ice quicker than scat. Albert succeeded in unhitching the team but the load went down.

We notice by the Norwood correspondent's items of last week that the grange held its secret degree work, first and second, in Antrindon Stafords barn yard. We presume however that the lodge goat had the la grippe and Mr. Stafford's buck sheep was used as a substitute. We have no reason to believe that the Charlevoix candidate will return to take the third degree work, because if he was knocked in on the second, where would he land on the third.

Valuable Manure.

When the cattle are fed on grain and oilmeal in addition to a more bulky ration the manure will be made more valuable. If the grain is grown on the farm the fields that produce it must be supplied with nitrogen and phosphates. The farmer or dairyman who purchases grain or hay brings back to his farm that which was lost in milk. But if he does not purchase food he must procure instead ground bone, phosphate, potash, nitrate of soda or some other form of fertilizer material

Electric Steel Furnaces.

An article in Le Genie Civil states that seventy-eight electric furnaces now exist in the steel works of the world, of which thirty-five are on the induction and forty-three on the arc principle. Fourteen are Kjellin furnaces, eleven Stassano, ten Rochling-Rodenhauser, three Electrometall society (Sweden) and one each Colby, Hiorth, Keller, Schneider and Wallin. There is a steady and marked tendency to increase the capacity of these furnaces, some of those already constructed holding as much as eight to ten tons.

Chapter 8

JACK ORDE was the youngest and most energetic of a large family that had long since scattered to diverse cities and industries. He and Grandpa and Grandma Orde dwelt now in the big, echoing, old fashioned house alone save for one maid. Grandpa Orde, now above sixty, was tall, straight, slender. His hair was quite white and worn a little long. His features were finely chiseled. Grandpa Orde had been a mighty breaker of the wilderness, but his time had passed, and he had fallen upon somewhat straitened ways. Grandma Orde, on the other hand, was a very small, spry old lady, with a small face, a small figure, small hands and feet. She dressed in the then usual cap and black silk of old ladies. Half her time she spent at her housekeeping, which she loved, jingling about from cellar to attic storeroom, seeing that Amanda, the maid, had everything in order.

To these people Orde came direct from the greatness of the wilderness and the ferocity of Hell's Half Mile. Such contrasts were possible even ten or fifteen years ago. The untamed country lay at the doors of the most modern civilization.

Newmark, reappearing one Sunday afternoon at the end of the two weeks, was apparently bothered. He examined the Orde place for some moments, walked on beyond it. Finding nothing there, he returned and after some hesitation turned in up the tar sidewalk and pulled at the old fashioned wire bell pull. Grandma Orde herself answered the door.

Newmark took off his gray felt hat.

"Will you kindly tell me where Mr. Orde lives?"

"This is Mr. Orde's," replied the little old lady.

"Pardon me," persisted Newmark, "I am looking for Mr. Jack Orde. I am sorry to have troubled you."

"Mr. Jack Orde lives here," returned Grandma Orde. "He is my son. Would you like to see him?"

"If you please," assented Newmark gravely, his thin, shrewd face masking itself with its usual expression of quizzical cynicism.

Newmark entered the cool, dusky interior and was shown to the left into a dim, long room. He perched on a mahogany chair and had time to notice a bookcase with a white covered shop, an old piano with the yellowing keys, haircloth sofa and chairs, steel engravings and two oil portraits when Orde appeared.

Newmark had known Orde only as riverman. Like most easterners, he was unable to imagine a man in rough clothes as being anything but a rough man. The figure he saw before him was correctly dressed in what was then the proper Sunday costume.

"Oh, it's you, Mr. Newmark!" cried Orde. "I'm glad to see you." He led the way into the hall and to another brighter room, in which Grandma Orde sat, a canary singing above her head.

"Mother," said Orde, "this is Mr. Newmark, who was with us on the drive this spring."

"Mr. Newmark and I spoke at the door," said she, extending her frail

"I'd like to see you get any three men to agree to anything on this river."

hand with dignity. "If you were on the drive, Mr. Newmark, you must have been one of the high privates in this dreadful war we all read about."

Newmark laughed. At Orde's suggestion the two passed back into the remains of the old orchard.

"Where have you been for the last couple of weeks?" asked Orde.

"I caught Johnson's drive and went on down river with him to the lake. I do not like the life at all, but the drive interested me. It interested me so much that I've come back to talk to you about it. I'm going to ask you a few questions about yourself."

"Oh, I'm not bashful about my career!" laughed Orde.

"How old are you?" inquired Newmark abruptly.

"Thirty."

"How long have you been log driving?"

"About six years."

"Why did you go into it?"

"Because there's nothing ahead of shoveling but dirt," Orde replied, with a quizzical look.

"Then you don't intend to drive logs all your life?" Newmark affirmed.

"Then you don't intend to drive logs all your life?" Newmark affirmed. "Then you don't intend to make that sort of thing the rest of your friends go in for—law and wholesale groceries and banking and the rest of it?"

"There is for me," replied Orde simply.

"Yet you're merely river driving on a salary at thirty."

Orde flushed slowly and shifted his position.

"I'm not asking all this out of idle curiosity. I've got a scheme in my head that I think may work out big for us both."

"Well," assented Orde reservedly, "in that case—I'm foreman on this drive because my outfit went kerplunk two years ago, and I'm making a fresh go at it."

"Failed?" inquired Newmark.

"Partner skedaddled," replied Orde. "Now, suppose you tell me what the devil you're driving at."

"Look here," said Newmark, abruptly changing the subject, "you know that rapids up river flanked by shallows, where the logs are always going aground?"

"I do."

"Well, why wouldn't it help to put a string of piers down both sides, with booms between them to hold the logs in the deeper water?"

"It would," said Orde.

"Why isn't it done, then?"

"Who would do it?" countered Orde. "If Daly did it, for instance, then all the rest of the drivers would get the advantage of it for nothing."

"Get them to pay their share."

Orde grinned. "I'd like to see you get any three men to agree to anything on this river."

"How many firms drive logs on this stream?"

"Ten," replied Orde without hesitation.

"How many do they employ?"

"About 500 men."

"Now, suppose"—Newmark leaned forward—"suppose a firm should be organized to drive all the logs on the river. Suppose it improved the river with piers and dams, so that the driving would be easier. Couldn't it drive with less than 500 men and save money?"

"It might," agreed Orde.

"If such a firm should be organized to drive the logs for these ten firms at so much a thousand, do you suppose it would get the business?"

"It would depend on the driving firm," said Orde. "You see, mill men have got to have their logs. They can't afford to take chances. It would not pay."

"Then that's all right," agreed Newmark, with a gleam of satisfaction across his thin face. "Would you form a partnership with me having such an object in view?"

Orde laughed.

"I guess you don't realize the situation," said he. "We'd have to have a few little things like distributing booms and tugs and a lot of tools and supplies and works of various kinds."

"Well, we'd get them."

"How much are you worth?" Orde inquired bluntly.

"Twenty thousand dollars. How much capital would we have to have?" asked Newmark.

Orde thought for several minutes.

"We would need somewhere near $75,000," he estimated at last.

"That's easy," cried Newmark. "We'll make a stock company—say 100,000 shares. We'll keep just enough between us to control the company—say 51,000. I'll put in my pile, and you can pay for yours out of the earnings of the company."

"That doesn't sound fair."

"You pay interest," explained Newmark. "Then we'll sell the rest of the stock to raise the rest of the money."

"I must have something to live on," said Orde thoughtfully at last.

"So must I," said Newmark. "We'll have to pay ourselves salaries, of course, but the smaller the better at first. You'll have to take charge of the men and the work and all the rest of it. I don't know anything about that. I'll attend to the incorporating and the routine, and I'll try to place the stock. You'll have to see first of all whether you can get contracts from the logging firms to drive the logs."

"How can I tell what to charge them?"

"We'll have to figure that very closely. You know where these different drives would start from and how long each of them would take?"

"Oh, yes!"

"Well, then we'll figure how many days' driving there is for each, and how many men there are, and what it costs for wages, grub, tools. We'll just have to figure as near as we can to the actual cost and then add a margin for profit and for interest on our investment."

Amanda now announced dinner.

Newmark looked puzzled and as he arose glanced surreptitiously at his watch. Orde seemed to take the summons as one to be expected, however. In fact, the 'strange hour' was the usual Sunday custom in the Redding of that day and had to do with the late church freedom of Amanda and her like.

"Come in and eat with us," invited Orde.

But Newmark declined.

"Come up tomorrow night, then, at half past 6 for supper," Orde urged him. "We can figure on these things a little."

Chapter 9

"I THINK I'll go see Jane Hubbard this evening," Orde remarked to his mother as he arose from the table.

Every Sunday Jane Hubbard offered to all who came a "Sunday night lunch," and the refreshments were served by the guests themselves. Orde found about the usual crowd gathered. Jane herself, tall, deliberate in movement and in speech, kindly and thoughtful, talked in a corner with Ernest Colburn, who was just out of college and who worked in a bank. Orde, standing in the doorway, looked upon quite the usual thing, only he missed the incubus. Searching the room with his eyes, he at length discovered that incoherent, dislocated, but persistent youth vis-a-vis with a stranger. Orde made out the white of her gown in the shadows, the willowy outline of her small and slender figure and the gracious forward bend of her head.

"So you're back at last, are you, Jack?" drawled Jane in her lazy, good natured way. "Come and meet Miss Bishop. Carroll, I want to present Mr. Orde."

Orde bowed ceremoniously. The girl inclined gracefully her small head with the glossy hair. The incubus, his sallow face twisted in a wry smile, held to the edge of his chair with characteristic pertinacity.

"Well, Walter," Orde addressed him genially, "are you having a good time?"

"Yes, indeed!"

His chair was planted squarely to exclude all others. Orde surveyed the situation with good humor.

"Going to keep the other fellow from getting a chance, I see."

"Yes, indeed!"

Orde bent over and, with great ease, lifted Incubus, chair and all, and set him facing Mignonne Smith and the croquet ball.

"Here, Mignonne," said he, "I've brought you another assistant."

He returned to the lamp to find the girl, her dark eyes alight with amusement, watching him intently.

"Walter is a very bright man in his own line," said Orde, swinging forward a chair, "but he mustn't be allowed any monopolies."

"How do you know I want him so summarily removed?" the girl asked him.

"Well," argued Orde, "I got him to say all he ever says to any girl. 'Yes,

The mocking laid your from her eyes and mouth.

indeed!' so you couldn't have any more conversation from him. Besides, I want to talk to you myself."

"Do you always get what you want?" inquired the girl.

Orde laughed.

"Any one can get anything he wants if only he wants it bad enough," he asserted.

"Some people," she amended. "However, I forgive you. I will even flatter you by saying I am glad you came. You look to have reached the age of discretion. I venture to say that those boys' idea of a lively evening is to throw bread about the table."

Orde flushed a little. The last time he had supped at Jane Hubbard's that was exactly what they did do.

"They are young, of course," he said, "and you and I are very old and wise."

"Now, tell me, what do you do?"

"What do I do?" asked Orde, puzzled.

"Yes. Everybody does something out west here."

"I'm a river driver just now."

"A river driver?" she repeated. "Why, I've just been hearing a great deal about you from Mrs. Baggs."

"Oh!" said Orde. "Then you know what a drunken, swearing, worthless lot of toughs we are, don't you?"

"There is Hell's Half Mile," she reminded him.

"Oh, yes," said Orde bitterly, "there's Hell's Half Mile! Whose fault is that? My rivermen's—my boys? Look here! I suppose you wouldn't understand it if you tried a month. But suppose you were working out in the woods three months of the year. Suppose you slept in rough blankets on the ground or in bunks, ate rough food, never saw a woman or a book, undertook work to scare your shy men up a tree, risked your life a dozen times a week in a tangle of logs with the big river roaring behind you, and at night, when you were dog tired, had to write letters and figure accounts. Suppose you had to do that, and suppose you had to live down there where there were all the things you hadn't had, and the first thing you struck was Hell's Half Mile. Say, you've seen water behind a jam, haven't you? Water power's a good thing in a mill house where it has wheels to turn, but behind a jam it just rips things. Oh, what's the use talking? A girl doesn't know what it means. She couldn't understand."

"I think I begin to understand a little," said she softly. "But they are a heartless class in spite of all their courage, aren't they?"

"Heartless!" exploded Orde. "There's no kinder lot of men on earth. There isn't a man on that river who doesn't chip in five or ten dollars when a man is hurt or killed, and that means three or four days' hard work for him. And he may not know or like the injured man at all. Why"—

"What's all the excitement?" drawled Jane Hubbard behind them. "Can't you make it a to be continued in our next? We're most starved."

"Yes, indeed!" chimed the Incubus.

The company trooped out to the dining room, where the table, spread with all the good things, awaited them.

To Orde's relief no one threw any bread, although the whole hearted fun grew boisterous enough before the close of the meal.

In spite of her half scornful reference to "bread throwing" Miss Bishop Cement Floors In Winter.

An excellent suggestion is made by a practical swine breeder to those having cement floors in their pens. He advises a movable wooden floor for the winter. He makes his own floors of one inch boards and lays them flat on the cement in sections small enough to be easily removed at any time. In this way he combines the advantages of both the cement and the wood. He can remove the board floor, scrub out the pen and also thoroughly clean and disinfect the false floors outside. Cement is the cheapest material to the end for the floor of the hogpen. The floor of the outdoor apartment should be a few inches lower than the house floor so as to insure drainage and dry sleeping quarters. Get the floor ready now.

Milk Leaking Cow Easily Cured.

A temporary preventive for a cow leaking her milk and one that is very easily applied is as follows. Smear the teats with photographer's collodion as soon as she has been milked. A small quantity of this rubbed over the teat, especially near the end, will contract sufficiently to compress the milk duct and prevent the milk from leaking out. A bottle of collodion may be kept in the barn, but it must be very carefully corked, as it evaporates rapidly. This method does not interfere with the circulation of blood.

FOR CLEAN AND SANITARY MILK

As the result of experiments made recently by experts a prominent dairyman gives the following information regarding the number of bacteria in milk produced under different conditions as follows:

Bacteria are minute plants. They are subject very largely to the laws of growth of larger plants. In order to thrive they require a certain temperature, varying with the species, as with other plants; also light or oxygen in a varying degree and material upon which to grow. Unlike large plants they grow largely upon organic matter or materials which have been built up by the higher plants and by animals.

The close relation between milk as a food and these bacteria is due to the fact that these germs thrive and multiply so rapidly in milk. A contamination of milk which is very slight in the beginning will in a few hours under favorable conditions of temperature reach such a magnitude that millions of these germs are introduced into the system of every person who partakes of the milk so contaminated. Nearly all of the changes which take place in milk except those of a purely physical nature, such as creaming, are caused by bacteria. Souring takes place because a certain kind of bacteria attacks the sugar in milk and turns part of it into lactic acid. Milk becomes stale and gives an offensive odor because of the work of bacteria.

Milk from healthy cows is practically free from bacteria when secreted. While under proper conditions some kinds of bacteria produce beneficial results, these kinds can be introduced into the milk when desired.

Some kinds of bacteria are much more dangerous than others, and attention to excluding these kinds should be in proportion to their significance to health. It is hardly necessary to say that cleanliness in all operations is at the foundation of the whole problem, but there must also be a knowledge of the conditions under which bacteria grow, for milk containing a very small number of bacteria when produced will be literally loaded with them in twenty-four hours.

Repeated tests have shown that even when a cow is cleaned as thoroughly as is possible under stable conditions particles of dust will be thrown off from her body during milking time, and these get into the milk and contaminate it. A cow should be kept away from sources of contamination, such as slink holes in which stagnant water accumulates, for such holes breed enormous numbers of putrefactive bacteria.

The cow should be thoroughly cleaned, preferably immediately before milking. It is also well to clip the hair short around the flanks and udders, and it is always advisable to moisten the flank just before milking.

Keep the stable free from dust during milking. Dust usually comes from feed, bedding or from breezes which collect dust outside the stable and carry it inside.

Lime is one of the cheapest and best germicides. Stables should be whitewashed frequently. Lime itself has a germicidal value, and it makes the stable lighter. Some dairymen use chloride of lime in the whitewash.

Water which is known to be contaminated should never be used in a dairy, or it should be boiled before using. This is a very simple precaution, the necessity of which cannot be doubted. Dairy utensils are a common source of contamination in milk. Choose utensils which are well soldered, in which there are no more joints than are essential.

The use of a closed pail in milking will prove to be a big help in keeping out a great number of bacteria. Any industrious dairyman can make a closed pail by covering the opening with a piece of sterilized cheesecloth.

A special room should be provided for weighing and cooling the milk and should be clean and the air as free from dust as is possible at all times. The use of a special suit while handling milk is a reasonable requirement. Wet hands while milking drip dirty water into the pail, introducing an innumerable number of germs.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

The union meeting held Sunday evening, January 30, at the M. E. church under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. was largely attended and a most interesting one from start to finish. The program consisted of music recitations and a local option demonstration by thirty young ladies dressed in white to represent the "dry" counties in Michigan. The young ladies were seated in the rear of the church until the proper moment came for them to appear on the platform. They then marched to the front, each holding a banner to represent a "dry" county with number of saloons put out of commission, and other information. At the close of the demonstration all joined in singing the Doxology not however, to close the meeting, but as a note of thanksgiving for the good work accomplished in the state. The recitations given by Mrs. Crantall and Mrs. Reed, "The Price of a Drink," and "I've Drank my Last Glass," were very good. The male quartett consisting of Mr. Marting and the three Wilkinson brothers, gave two selections which were well rendered. Mrs. Rachow sang a beautiful solo and Mrs. Marting sang the famous song, "Victory," sung at the National Conventions by Francis W. Graham, their musical director. A good collection was taken up for the work. "Blest be the Tie that Binds," was sung in closing, and benediction by Rev. H. A. Putnam.

The funeral services of John B. Looze of Eveline township were held on Tuesday at the Peninsula Grange hall and were largely attended, he being held in high esteem by all who knew him. The services were conducted by Rev. W. W. Lamport of this place and burial took place at the Haley cemetery near Advance. Mr. Looze was a native of Belgium and came to America in 1853, settling in Michigan in 1867, and has since been a resident of this county. He was a member of the Fourteenth Wisconsin regiment in the civil war, serving four years. He leaves three sons, William, Perry and Edward.—East Jordan Herald.

WHAT THE KIDNEYS DO

Their Unceasing Work Keeps us Strong and Healthy.

All the blood in the body passes through the kidneys once every three minutes. The kidneys filter the blood. They work night and day. When healthy they remove about 5000 grains of impure matter daily, when unhealthy some parts of this impure matter is left in the blood. This brings on many diseases and symptoms—pain in the back, headache, nervousness, hot dry skin, rheumatism, gout, gravel, disorders of the eyesight and hearing, dizziness, irregular heart, debility, drowsiness, irregular heart, debility, drowsiness, dropsy, deposits in the urine, etc. But if you keep the filterers right you will have no trouble with your kidneys.

Mrs. John Chamberlin, Forest St. Mancelona, Mich., says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills an excellent preparation for kidney disorders, in fact, I found them far superior to any other kidney remedy I ever used. My back ached severly and I had pains in my loins, coupled with other symptoms of disordered kidneys. When Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my notice, I obtained a box and their use brought me prompt relief from the aches and pains. I recommend Doan's Kidney Pills at every opportunity."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

[This matter must not be reprinted without special permission.]

One's real rating as to character is as often indicated by the kind of eggs he turns in at the country grocer's as by the enrollment of his name as a member of the nearby kirk.

In buying pure bred cattle it is well for the purchaser to insist on a guarantee of freedom from tuberculosis and from infection with contagious abortion. There are other ailments he may steer shy of, but these are chief as well as most common.

Strictly used, the word "thoroughbred" refers to a definite breed of horses—running horses—and not to thoroughness or purity of breeding. In the same way the phrase "standard bred" refers to a breed of trotting horses. The word "pure bred" is properly used in referring to any breed of animals or fowls that is full, or pure, blooded.

There are sections in Idaho where the weather is so clear and the air so dry during the season of ripening and following that some growers make a practice of allowing blackberries to remain on the vines and evaporate in the sun. When sufficiently dry the canes are cut, run through a sort of thrasher and the dried fruit cleaned and packed.

The fellows who trusted to luck and left their potatoes unding until Oct. 13 last season had an experience they will not soon forget, as hundreds of thousands of bushels through all the northern states were ruined and rendered unmarketable by the cold snap of that date. With no starch factory or denatured alcohol distillery at hand they proved in many cases a total loss.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars that are squandered annually in wildcat investment schemes and blue sky enterprises could be saved for the investors if before letting loose of their money they would get an honest opinion as to the reliability of such concerns from a home banker. It would mean a few cents tied up in postage, but this would be a mighty cheap way out.

In view of the fatal freeze of Oct. 12 and 13, it will be necessary to set an earlier date than Oct. 15 as the limit within which one should select his seed corn. If Sept. 20 were the time chosen and every corn grower went into his best field and secured the soundest and earliest maturing ears and had them hung up to dry by that time and saw to it that they were properly stored during the winter months, the seed corn problem would be reduced to a minimum through all the northern part of the corn belt.

The housewife who is on her feet so much of the day throughout all months of the year should learn a lesson from her husband, who not only rides when mowing, raking, reaping and plowing, but even takes it easy by rigging a riding gear to follow his harrow. This idea she may put to good account by purchasing a light fifty cent stool, two feet high, and having it handy to sit on when doing work at which she would otherwise have to stand. In the course of a long day a good deal of energy may be saved in this way.

It would make the farmers of those states where the rainfall was very heavy during November and where the country roads were rendered well nigh impassable for weeks gasp if they could see figured out in dollars and cents the actual loss they sustained in the single item of increased expense in hauling their produce to market. In many localities it was impossible to stir at all, while in others but a small jag could be moved, and four horses were often required to do this. It seems strange, with agricultural products representing so large a value, that rural dwellers take so slight an interest in a question that in the aggregate means a loss of millions of dollars to them annually.

As with a child, the time for doing most effective work in shaping the character and type of a tree is at the start. For this reason it is better to purchase fruit trees that are a year old rather than two or three years. The low head, which is so highly prized by most orchardists, is best secured by cutting the young tree back to from eighteen inches to two feet the same season it is set. This induces the growth of sturdy lateral branches and gives the trunk a stocky character that is of great value in succeeding years. Whether the tree should be given the vase shaped open top or the round and more close growing top will depend to a great extent upon the climatic conditions prevailing.

There came to the writer's attention the other day the instance of a creamery patron who thought he would get rich more quickly by mixing melted tallow in the can of cream from which the driver's sample was taken, thereby increasing the test of the cream nearly 100 per cent. This went on until the suspicions of the buttermakers and directors were aroused by the presence of the cold, unmixed tallow left in the strainer at the creamery. One day a two quart sample of the doped cream was turned over to the state pure food inspector, who sent it to a chemist for analysis, when 90 per cent of the fat it contained was found to be plain beef suet, amounting to a pound and four ounces. With this as a starter suit was instituted and a fine of $50 and costs levied. A little later the directors of the creamery compelled the offender to pay back $400, the amount estimated that he had received as a result of the false tests. As it turned out it proved to be high priced tallow, and it is clear that the game was not worth the candle.

The history of Berkshire hogs goes back 125 years, the progenitors of the popular breed being described as large in size and of a sandy or brownish color spotted with black. The present day type is black, with white in face, on feet and end of tail. The first importation of Berkshires into America was made by a New Jersey breeder in 1832.

The first prize in the students' judging contests at the International fat stock show held at Chicago in December went to the team from the state college at Ames, Ia., who had 4040 points to its credit. The Ontario team won second place with 4741 points, the other college teams taking part ranking in the following order: Ohio, 4722; Nebraska, 4651; Missouri, 4622; Kansas, 4603; Texas, 4435. The town team won first on cattle and sheep, Missouri first on horses and Ohio first on sheep.

According to Secretary Wilson's annual report for 1909, the American tea crop consisted of 12,000 pounds and was grown in South Carolina in cooperation with the department at Washington. The experimental work attempted on a small scale at Pierce, Tex., has been abandoned owing to unfavorable climatic conditions. The proposition the department officials are up against in the production of tea is the 15 to 20 cent wage paid to tea pickers in the orient. Unless machinery can be devised to do the work there done by hand the tea growing business will have to be given up.

Azoturia, a disease of the horse family that yearly takes off thousands of valuable individuals, is directly due to overfeeding with nitrogenous foods, like clover and alfalfa, and lack of regular exercise. The illness is brought on by an overloading of the circulatory system with unoxidized nitrogen drawn from the liver, where it accumulates. While there are cures for the disease, it is easily prevented by reducing the nitrogenous ration—the feeding of timothy and clean straw, instead of clover and alfalfa, and feeding a light mixed ration of corn and oats. Another help for the horse which does not have regular work is the run of a paddock, where it will get exercise enough to keep in good condition.

J. G. Imboden, a leading Illinois cattle feeder, in a recent address before the Corn Belt Meat Producers' association advised his hearers as feeders of cattle to buy the common kinds of steers rather than high grades, as they would be able to get them at about their own prices since in the case of the grades the owner had too much to say about the price he received. While not intended as such, there seems to be a very excellent argument here for the cattle raiser to produce the grade and high grade steers rather than the scrub, as the call for them is so strong on the part of buyers that there are never enough to supply the demand. This means that the price for this class of steers will always range high

Whether part of a preconceived scheme or not, it is observable if one looks into the situation at all that our system of national economy, especially as regards transportation and manufacture, seems to be so adjusted as to give the transportation companies of the country the longest possible hauls on raw and finished products. A few illustrations come readily to mind. Cow hides are shipped largely to New England in the raw, one freight charge and then shipped back all over the west in enormous quantities, another freight charge. The wool product of the great west crosses the continent to eastern mills largely, and when made into blankets and garments is shipped halfway across the continent to reach its consumers, two transportation charges. Instead of the New England states producing all the butter that they use, the bulk of it is shipped from the Mississippi valley, the freight charge being reduced so low that thousands of the hilly farms of the east have been abandoned because of the western competition, but the transportation company gets the freight. And so the list might be enlarged, including Texas onions and vegetables shipped to New York and Chicago, Pacific coast fruits, etc., those near big markets being knocked out by cheap freight rates granted to those living at a distance, and yet through it all the railroads securing a big slice of the proceeds for getting the product, whatever it may be, from producer to consumer. The development, which is certainly an interesting one, is on the increase, but whether best for the largest number of people in the long run remains to be seen.

Buried under a sleigh load of sawdust, while on his way to his farm north of Traverse City, Edward Antoine, a prosperous farmer, 50 years old, met instant death. The snow in the road way at that point is piled up in the center causing the sleigh to overturn, completely covering him up.

Some time later Warren Dickerman and his mother, neighbors of Antoine, were driving along the road when they saw Antoine's team standing at the side. They had become detached from the sleigh and were apparently awaiting the command of their master. Dickerman summoned others and the body was extricated and taken to the home. He leaves a widow and six children.

That every county within the state of Michigan is working harmoniously with the state highway department in the pursuit of more and better roads and that unparalleled enthusiasm has been shown by the township boards and farmers in every section of the lower and upper peninsula, was indicated Tuesday when checks, amounting to $110,126 were mailed to the county treasuries of Michigan in payment of rewards on roads accepted since July 1, 1909.

During the fiscal year ending July 1, 1909, the state of Michigan paid out in reward just $12,067, or but slightly over $6,000 more than the total rewards for the last six months.

For sometime past the highway department has been holding institutes in the lower peninsula and according to department officials the counties and townships in every instance have decided to build more roads during the next season than they have during either of the last two seasons.

At the next session of the legislature the highway department will request that the annual reward appropriation, which is now $100,000 be increased to $250,000 annually on account of the great percentage of increase in county road building both during the months recently past and that assured for the coming year.

A First-Class Third-Choice Mayor.

Human Life for January has a story of a recent mayoralty contest in a booming Colorado town which was without doubt, one of the most unique elections ever held in this country, and was backed by picturesque features that would have delighted the romancer seeking local color in the "wild and woody."

In Colorado, you know, the women may vote as well as the men, and it is most interesting to note the part they played in this election.

The town had voted to adopt the commission form of government, and the mayoralty contest was conducted by the preferential system of voting, imported from Australia, which had the surprising effect of sweeping to victory a mayor who was not the people's first choice, or even their second, but who came out ahead because he was their third choice.

THE CAUSE OF COLDS

Good Advice Regarding the Preventions of Coughs and Colds.

If people would only fortify and strengthen the system, the majority of cases of coughs, colds and pneumonia might be avoided. These troubles are frequently due to weakness, which produces a catarrhal condition of the mucous membrane, which is an internal skin of the body. When this skin is weakened it becomes easily infected with germs which cause many of the diseases to which flesh is heir. Healthy mucous membranes are essential safeguards of the body's general health.

An excellent aid in the prevention of coughs, colds, pneumonia, and such like infectious diseases, is a remedy that will prevent or cure catarrh.

We have a remedy which we honestly believe to be unsurpassed in excellence for the prevention of coughs, colds and all catarrhal conditions. It is the prescription of a famous physician, who has an enviable reputation of thirty years of cures gained through the use of this formula. We promise to make no charge for the medicine should it fail to do as we claim. We urge everybody who has need of such a medicine to try Rexall Mucu-Tone. It stands to reason that we could not afford to make such statements and give our own personal guarantee to this remedy if we were not prepared to prove the reasonableness of our claims in every particular, and we see no reason why any one should hesitate to accept our offer and try. We have two sizes of Rexall Mucu-Tone, prices 50 cents and $1.00. Sometimes a 50 cent bottle is sufficient to give marked relief. As a general thing the most chronic case is relieved with an average of three large bottles. You can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store—The Rexall Store. The Ivy Drug Store, A. B. Quality

In what you buy is more important to you, than price alone. The best is always the cheapest in the end. Many dealers are short sighted. (Continued from page three)

After the meal was finished Orde, with determination, made his way to Miss Bishop's side. She turned to the piano, struck a few chords, and then, her long hands wandering idly and softly up and down the keys, she smiled at them over her shoulder.

Song followed song, at first quickly, then at longer intervals. The girl still sat at the piano, her head thrown back idly, her hands wandering softly in and out of melodies and modulations. Orde finally saw only the shimmer of her white figure and the white outline of her head and throat. At last her hands fell in her lap. She sat looking straight ahead of her.

Orde came to her.

"That was a wonderfully beautiful thing," said he. "What was it?"

She turned to him, and he saw that the mocking had gone from her eyes and mouth, leaving them quite simple, like a child's.

He hesitated and stammered awkwardly. "It was so still and soothing it made me think of the river sometimes about dusk. What was it?"

"It wasn't anything. I was improvising."

"You made it up yourself?"

"It was myself, I suppose. I love to build myself a garden and wander on until I lose myself in it. I'm glad there was a river in the garden—a nice, still, twilight river."

At this moment the outside door opened to admit Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard, who had, according to their usual Sunday custom, been spending the evening with a neighbor. The company began to break up.

Orde pushed his broad shoulders in to screen Carroll Bishop from the others.

"Are you staying here?" he asked.

"I'm visiting Jane."

"Are you going to be here long?" was Orde's next question.

"About a month."

"I am coming to see you," announced Orde. "Good night."

He took her hand, dropped it and followed the others into the hall, leaving her standing by the lamp. She watched him until the outer door had closed behind him. Jane Hubbard, returning after a moment from the hall, found her at the piano again, her head slightly one side, playing with painful and accurate exactness a simple one finger melody.

Reaching his home Orde walked confidently to the narrow stairs and ascended them. Subconsciously he avoided the creaking step, but outside his mother's door he stopped, arrested by a greeting from within.

"That you, Jack?" queried Grandma Orde.

For answer Orde entered. He made out the great square bed and divined the tiny figure of his mother.

"Mother," said he abruptly, "I've met the girl I want for my wife."

Grandma Orde sat up in bed.

"Who is she?" she demanded.

"Her name is Carroll Bishop," said Orde, "and she's visiting Jane Hubbard."

"Yes, but who is she?" insisted Grandma Orde. "Where is she from?"

Orde stared at her in the dim light.

"Why, mother, bless! if I know that!"

Chapter 10

THE next evening on reaching home Orde found that Newmark had preceded him by some few moments.

After supper Orde led the way up two flights of narrow stairs to his room.

"Well," said he, "I've made up my mind today to go in with you. It may not work out, but it's a good chance. I don't know who you are nor how much of a business man you are, but I'll risk it."

"I'm putting in $20,000," pointed out Newmark.

"And I'm putting in my everlasting reputation," said Orde. "If we tell these fellows that we'll get out their logs for them and then don't do it I'll be dead around here."

Newmark pursued the subject. "I've no objection to telling you about myself. New York born and bred; experience with Cooper & Dunne, brokers, eight years. Money from a legacy. Parents dead. No relatives to speak to."

Orde nodded gravely.

"Now," said Newmark, "have you had time to do any figuring?"

"Well," replied Orde, "I have a rough idea." He produced a bundle of scribbled papers from his coat pocket. "I take Daly as a sample, because I've been with his outfit. It costs him to run and deliver his logs 100 miles about $2 a thousand feet. He's the only big manufacturer up here. I suppose it costs the other nine firms from two to two and a half a thousand."

Newmark jotted down figures.

"Do these men all conduct separate drives?" he inquired.

"All but Proctor and old Heinzman. They pool in together."

"Now," went on Newmark, "if we were to drive the whole river, how could we improve on that?"

"In the first place we wouldn't need so many men. I could run the river on 300 easy enough. That saves wages and grub on 200 right there. And, of course, a few improvements on the river would save time, which in our case would mean money. We would not need so many separate cook outfits and all that. Then, too, if we agreed to sort and deliver we'd have to build sorting booms down at Mourovia."

"Suppose we had all that. What, for example, do you reckon you could bring Daly's logs down for?"

Orde fell into deep thought.

"I suppose somewhere about a dollar," he announced at last. He looked up a trifle startled. "Why," he cried, "that looks like big money! A hundred per cent!"

Newmark smiled.

"Hold on," said he. "I don't know anything about this business, but I can see a few things. In the first place, close figuring will probably add a few cents to that dollar. And then all our improvements will be valueless after we've got through using them. You said yesterday they'd probably stand us in $75,000. Even at a dollar profit we'd have to drive 75,000,000 before we got a cent back. And, of course, we've got to agree to drive for a little less than they could themselves."

"That's so," agreed Orde, crestfallen.

"However," said Newmark briskly as he arose, "there's good money in it, as you say. Now, how soon can you leave Daly?"

"By the middle of the week."

"That's good. Then we'll go into this matter of expense thoroughly and establish our schedule of rates to submit to the different firms."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

GRASS LAND "MINING."

Hay Farming Gradually Extracts Fertility From the Soil.

Hay farming is sometimes called mining the land because it is supposed to gradually remove and exhaust the fertility of the farm in the same way that mining removes the ore supplies. Yet production of hay for market purposes seems to be more and more popular of late years, owing partly to the high prices of hay and to the better understanding of the use of agricultural chemicals for hay production. Hay farming with chemicals as commonly practiced no doubt removes more fertility than it restores, but the process is very slow and no doubt highly profitable under right conditions.

The owner of fertile, moist grass land might well say with the mine owner that he cannot afford to leave too much ore in the ground or too much fertility in the soil, but prefers to sell it and have the value at interest. Fertile, moist land will often continue producing good, profitable crops of market hay for an ordinary working lifetime. In England, where the climate is very favorable to grass, a sod is often kept fifty years without breaking. Not much land in this country will stand cropping so long to one specialty, but natural grass land will stand the process a very long time.

To exhaust the land as little as possible it is necessary not to skimp in top dressing, but to put back the greater part of the fertility that is taken out by the crop, returning it in the form of manure or chemicals, or both combined. If the land is top dressed enough to keep the crop large, but not extra large, say about two tons per acre the first cutting, while the second cutting is not mowed nor fed off, but allowed to stay and decay on the land, a good deal of fertility and vegetable matter will be returned to the soil, and this course may be kept up a long time, especially on soil which is deep and fertile—as for instance, a piece of swale which has been drained for three and one-half to four feet below the surface. Such soil is often almost perfect for grass—a genuine hay mine, so to speak—and with right treatment will continue to return a big income for twenty years or more.

The plan of hay farming with chemicals has its attractions, especially for the oldish man who desires to get rid of the care of live stock and to cut down his labor outgo to the lowest possible amount. With good grass land it is considered that the plan of moderate top dressing with chemicals brings a larger income for the labor employed than any other system of management. Frequent plowing will give a larger average crop with an equal amount of fertilizer, but it costs more to produce and is more work to harvest.

The fewer of these thirty cents on the dollar investment schemes a fellow ties his hard earned money up in, in the vain hope of making fabulous returns, the more quarters he will have at the end of the year.

The cotton crop of 1909, while not the largest on record, is likely to prove the most valuable, with that fetching 13.7 cents per pound on the farm and cotton seed worth about $25 per ton. At these prices the crop will be worth about $850,000,000 to the growers.

The Massachusetts state board of health has made some investigations into the somewhat mooted question of the relative keeping quality of drawn and undrawn poultry, and its verdict is that if the entrails are so drawn that none of their contents are spilled inside the body the bird keeps better than in the undrawn state.

CARPET AND RUG TREATMENT.

How They Can Be Cleaned and Made to Last Longer.

To spoil a carpet sweep it with a stiff, half worn broom, but to save a carpet dip your broom in clean, hot suds once a week, then shake it out and hang it up to dry.

Rugs should be beaten on the wrong side, then swept on the right side. Spots may be removed by the use of ox gall or ammonia and water, using a sponge or flannel. Slightly moistened bran is equally as good as salt in brightening rugs and carpets.

Vinegar will remove lime spots. Soot from an open chimney or the careless handling of stovepipes can be removed by covering thickly with salt, and this afterward can be brushed up quickly without injury to the carpets. Spirits of ammonia diluted with water, if applied with sponge or flannel to discolored spots, will often restore the color.

Remove ink stains with milk, and after soaking up all that seems possible either sprinkle thickly with salt or wash with a pure white soap, a clean brush and warm water.

For grease spots use powdered magnesia, fuller's earth or buckwheat flour. Sprinkle on spots and let it lie until grease is absorbed. Renew the flour or other absorbent material as often as necessary.

When carpet moths are discovered after removing all artificial lights in the room saturate the cracks in the floor with benzine. Wash upper edge of the carpet with a solution containing sixty parts of poison to one part of alcohol. Be extremely careful about using this if there are children about.

For ingrain or three ply carpets wring a cloth out of hot water and lay it over the edges or binding and iron with an iron as hot as can be without scorching. This destroys the moth as well as the eggs. Wilton and the heavier carpets must be steamed on the underside.

A good solution to use in wiping up the floor before putting down the rugs or carpets is as follows: A quarter of a pound of red pepper steeped in a gallon of water, to which are added two drams of strychnia powder.

TREATING RHEUMATISM.

How to Secure Relief From a Very Painful Ailment.

To cure rheumatism it is necessary to rid the system of the excess of uric acid, and to do this a proper diet is even more important than the use of drugs, though in very severe cases the latter are not to be despised in conjunction with the dieting that is absolutely essential.

The Massachusetts General hospital of Boston allows the following diet for its rheumatic patients: Graham or brown bread, white bread (limited to one-half slice daily), corn, granum, rice, milk, eggs, flour puddings, crackers, beans, peas, all kinds of vegetables except potatoes, tomatoes and asparagus, rhubarb, fresh fish, butter, cheese, buttermilk, cream, alkaline waters and toast. Avoid red meats, starch or potatoes, white bread and sugars.

The sensible use of water, both internally and externally, plays a large part in the prevention or cure of rheumatism. One or two glasses, either hot or cold, taken before breakfast every morning is excellent to start the organs of digestion for the day, and at least one glass should be taken between meals. Often the plain water will be enough to move a slightly constipated person, but if not a mild medicated water may be taken instead. It is very essential to keep the bowels open in cases of rheumatism.

Uric acid in the system is a poison, and it must not be forgotten that poisonous waste matter is also eliminated through the skin. The pores of the skin must be kept freely open and not allowed to become clogged if we hope to obtain the best results with rheumatic cases. A hot bath at bedtime is often very helpful.—Delineator.

How to Sew Lace to a Centerpiece.

A new way to put lace on a round centerpiece is to turn the material up on the right side. Just the tiniest edge is turned, and it may be necessary to slit it occasionally to make it lie flat. The thread of the lace is drawn for a gathering and the lace put around the centerpiece on top of the turned back edge. It must be held just full enough to lie flat, but not to ruffle. After the lace is basted on it may either be sewed firmly by machine or hand. Then outline the inner edge with a heavy cable stitch, using a twisted long thread cotton. This makes a smart finish and is much quicker than the usual buttonholed edge with lace sewed underneath.

How to Mend China.

The most successful way to mend broken china is the following formula: Powder a small quantity of lime and take the white of one egg and mix together to a paste. Apply this quickly to the china to be mended, place the broken pieces together firmly, and they will become set and strong. It is unusual when china breaks in the same place again after being mended with this paste.

How to Make a Turkey Feather Fan.

It was decided that the farmer ought to keep a record of all the time he puts in on his farm also a record of all his receipts and average it up each year. When he has did this four or five years average the yearly amount together so as to tell him what his farm will allow him to pay for his help, as some farms would do better if conducted differently. CARING FOR THE HERD BULL

A practical breeder makes the following excellent suggestions concerning the care of the herd bull: The herd bull is probably the most important factor in the success of a breeding establishment. His character and individuality stamp themselves upon the whole herd and set for it its standard, high or low. The selection of a proper herd bull, as well as his proper care and management, is a matter of the utmost importance. I will not undertake to formulate a code for the selection of a herd bull, but wish to emphasize the fact that the best is none too good and that to economize upon one's stock bull is poor economy. The main essentials to proper care of a bull are that the animal shall have plenty of exercise, proper nourishment and the preservation of his vigor and vitality.

The bull should be provided with a paddock of about two or three acres and should be allowed to run therein at least several hours each day. It is a very convenient arrangement to have a small shed at some portion of the paddock which contains a roomy box stall, one which is free from drafts during the cold winter months.

During the winter season the bull should be kept up at night and allowed to run out as much as the inclement weather will permit during the day. A young bull calf or two turned into the paddock with the herd bull will romp and play with him and force him to take the exercise which is so essential to his welfare.

A bull should be fed a ration rich in protein to supply the constant drain upon him. A mixture of equal parts cracked corn, crushed oats and wheat bran, to which is added a pint of flaxseed meal, fed twice daily in connection with clover or pea hay or pasturage, will give most excellent results. Root crops are also fine feed during the winter. Should the bull have a tendency to lay on fat and get sluggish, decrease the corn and increase the oats. As to the amount of the ration to feed, this will depend on the size, age and amount of service given the bull.

A young growing bull should be fed practically all he will clean up with a relish, though never feed so much that he will not lick his trough clean after each meal. For an aged bull a gallon or two constitute a feed, regulated, of course, by his condition and requirements. The stable quarters of the bull should by all means be roomy and at all times clean and sanitary. Occasionally the bull and his quarters should be sprayed with some good disinfecting solution. The breeder should always bear in mind in regard to his bull that the laborer is worthy of his hire and that extra care bestowed upon him will bring rich returns. Certainly an animal which means so much to a herd and from which so much is demanded deserves the very best.

FEEDING HORSES IN WINTER.

Much Care Is Required In Selecting Rations During This Period.

To raise horses from suckling colts keep them going ahead. Never allow them to get a setback, as the first year's growth goes far in determining what the animal will be at maturity. After weaning, the colt should be kept in a well bedded box stall, with plenty of light and ventilation. It should be allowed to take plenty of exercise in favorable weather. A good ration consisting of three quarts of oats and one of bran, mixed with water, and a little salt and molasses or oilmeal cake should be fed three times a day. Oats are exceedingly fine for making bone, and a healthy ration for laying on fat is an occasional feed of boiled barley. A little corn may be fed at noon at odd times also. A good fodder feed is six or seven pounds clover and timothy hay mixed. This should be fed mornings and evenings and as much as the colt will consume.

Yearlings and two-year-olds are large enough to rough it in winter. Put them in an open shed or feed lot, and when the weather is not too severe they will do well if turned out in pasture three or four hours during the middle of the day. As a general rule, colts of this age are fed corn, but one must use his own judgment as to whether or not the colt is large enough. If oats are plentiful they should be fed at the rate of about a gallon of oats and a quart of bran to a feed.

Plenty of good, clean drinking water should be placed where they can get it whenever it is needed. Some people water their colts at regular intervals to prevent their getting too much and thus avoiding chills.

They should be fed during the winter about a gallon of oats to a quart of bran to a feed morning and evening. The noonday ration should consist of a feed of corn. If the mare is being worked hard she should have more corn. A boiled feed at every week end will guard against week end diseases which result from standing.

Stallions should be kept in a good, roomy box stall, with lots of light and ventilation and a paddock or well fenced lot to run in. If this is not possible they should be given a mile's daily run for exercise to keep their legs and feet in good condition.

A game which takes four miles of country for the playing must always have a majesty of its own. It is surely a great testimony to the qualities of a game when a man can be both enthusiastic and ineffectual. It is a proof at least that a man plays for the game's sake and not for personal kudos. Golf is the coquette of games. It always lures one on and always evades one. Ten years ago I thought I had nearly got it. I think so today. And ten years hence I may still have the same delusion. But my scoring cards will show, I fear, that the coquette has not yet been caught. The middle aged lover cannot hope to win her smile.—Conan Doyle in Strand.

FRUIT GROWERS MEET AT BELLAIRE

Meeting Well Attended by Farmers in that Vicinity

250,000 ACRES ORCHARD IN MICHIGAN

Yet Apples are Being Shipped Into the State

Again Asserts that Spraying is Absolutely Essential to Successful Fruit Growing.

Acting under the instructions of members present at the last meeting of the Charlevoix Fruit Growers Association your secretary attended the meeting of the Antrim county Association at Bellaire and certainly enjoyed a very profitable meeting.

Secretary Bassett of the State Horticultural Society was present and addressed an audience of about 140 farmers and farmers' wives.

Mr. Bassett's subject was, "Getting back to Eden or the Rejuvenating of the Old Orchard." He made it very plain that we were really not so far removed from the ideal condition of the Garden of Eden as we really appear. Says that he thinks perhaps that it was a Ben Davis apple that Adam received and that perhaps the serpent was none other than the worm of the coddling moth and that as the proper attention to God's laws at that time would have averted disaster so the proper attention to nature's laws at the present time will avert trouble for the fruit grower. Carelessness will not do. Business principles are necessary in this, as in other lines of business.

Our county's business is fast changing from lumbering to agriculture, and what has been one of the greatest lumbering regions of the country has the natural resources to become one of the greatest agricultural regions of the country, and that the same business principals which made it great in one respect will make it great in the other.

Michigan has approximately 250,000 acres under orchard and yet is shipping apples into the state simply because the orchards are not properly cared for.

In changing from the natural fruit of the country to more improved varieties, we have secured numerous pests and diseases as well as the better fruits, and have failed to treat either the diseases or the fruits properly and are failing to produce a product of good quality.

Mr. Bassett says that over 87,000 barrels of No. 1 apples were shipped from the vicinity in which he lives, and that they received a little better prices than any other section on account of the fact that many buyers were on hand and carloads could be easily gotten.

He also says that six carloads of spray material were used in the same vicinity on fruits and other lines of agriculture.

It would be impossible to mention here all of the many points that were discussed, but I wish to mention a few of the things said relative to spraying.

First; Spraying is becoming absolutely essential to successful fruit growing.

It must be done at the right time and in the right manner. He cannot tell you just what day, but you can learn from books and pamphlets what the proper condition is and watch the trees for the time. Trees must be sprayed just about the time that buds are swelling in order to prevent insects from injuring buds. Must not be sprayed when buds are open or bees and other helpful insects which are essential to fertilizer will be killed. Must be sprayed again when petals are falling and spray material must be gotten into the blossoms in order to kill the worms which work into apples from the blossom end.

Mr. Bassett took up and discussed in detail many subjects regarding the fruit industry, and at the next meeting of our society the secretary will claim time enough to give a more detailed account of his address which would make too long an article for publication.

The Intermediate Valley Association became affiliated with the State Society and the Charlevoix County Society is invited to do the same.

By co-operative buying the state society has been able to secure for its members prices of spray materials very much lower than the prices offered to individuals, the business of the society having been let to the lowest of a dozen firms which bid for it.

In this manner the society secured a very low wholesale price which it extends to all its members. Your secretary joined the state society and received some very interesting price lists, and will be glad to correspond with anyone who contemplates buying spray material, and feels satisfied that anyone buying through the state society will save money.

Mr. Bassett sums up the treating of an orchard by comparing it with a work horse and says: "If it is tired, rest it. If hungry, feed it. If vermon covered and filthy, clean it up. If sick, doctor it.'

In other words, give it the same treatment that you would give anything else that you expected to make pay you.

Plan to attend the next meeting of the society in Charlevoix on Tuesday, March 1, 1910. It will pay you.

Respectfully submitted,
J. H. MILFORD, Secy.

HOME TEAM DEFEATED

In Hard Fought Basket Ball Game at Bellaire

Game was Close and Exciting From Start—Play Here Saturday Night.

Friday evening, February 11, the Charlevoix high school basket ball team was taken into camp by the Bellaire high school team, on the latter's floor. As usual the game was fast and furious, both teams playing a much improved game over that of three weeks previous, which Charlevoix won by a score of 22 to 16.

Charlevoix lineup was somewhat changed from that of the previous game, Paddock being changed from forward to guard, taking the place of Wallace, while Leo Powers went in at forward. At the beginning of the second half, L. Cram took Kirby's place at guard, putting up a constant scrappy game.

Bellaire was out to avenge their former defeat, and aided by lumbarity with their home floor and to presence of 200 rooters, largely composed of Antrim county school marm's, who were attending the Antrim county Teacher's Institute, they won out, the final score being 16 to 12.

The game was close and exciting from the start. At no time was the home team out of the running. First Charlevoix led and then Bellaire. The first half ending 6 to 8 in favor of Bellaire. After the ten minute rest, both teams came back confident of winning, and Bellaire managed to get two more baskets than Charlevoix, and were returned winners.

But three games remain to be played, and these are undoubtedly the hardest yet. Although it has been the portion of the local boys to come out with the small end of score, yet they are not discouraged and each week sees them adding to their effort to overcome it. Their latest effort is the securing of Fred Brown, manage of the Boy's City, as coach. Mr. Brown has had years of experience in basket ball, both as a player and a coach. He works the boys out every afternoon and evening, and is getting good results. Practice this week is especial strenuous to preparation of the East Jordon game Saturday evening.

Two weeks ago Charlevoix was defeated by East Jordan at East Jordan. The boys were somewhat handicapped by the fact that the floor had been waxed for a dance and was unusually slippery. They will put up the game of their life Saturday, for there is nothing that the Charlevoix youths would rather do than defeat East Jordan.

A preliminary has been arranged, the like of which Charlevoix has yet to see. Two girl teams will play the curtain raiser, one representing the high school and the other the county normal class. This alone will be worth the price of admission, as there is nothing so interesting as a girls' game of basket ball.

GRANGE LEGISLATION

Executive Committee Outlines What Will Be Asked For.

At a meeting held in Lansing last week the executive committee of the State grange, it was decided to ask for the following legislation, resolutions being adopted in favor of a general parcel post and postal savings banks.

The grange will ask Michigan senators and representatives to use their influence in favor of these propositions.

The executive committee selected the following questions for presentation to the people and to the next legislatures, as of the highest importance to the welfare of the state:

Tonnage tax on ore; conservation of natural resources; making telephone companies common carriers; progressive action on the question of good roads; Torrens system of land transfers; the further extension of direct nominations to meet the original demands of the grange.

ENTERS THE RACE

For the Republican Nomination for Governor

Amos S. Musselman Will be a Candidate at the Primaries.

Amos S. Musselman formally entered the race for the governorship in the following letter issued last week:

"My friends and neighbors in Grand Rapids and Kent county—where I have lived continuously for the last thirty-three years—have in almost overwhelming numbers signed a petition (headed by my lamented friend, John Widdicomb) asking me to make formal announcement of my candidacy for the office of governor of Michigan. When the work of circulating this petition was begun two weeks since I had no thought that more than 3,000 or 4,000 names would be attached. But I am informed that upward of 8,000 voters of Kent county have already signed and that 100 petitions are still in circulation.

"The characters of the signers particularly appeals to me. Not only my business acquaintances and men who have been long and favorably known in the politics of the state are to be found in goodly numbers, but the great majority of the signers are from the rank and file of the people—the men who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. Here are laborers, mechanics, artisans, farmers, merchants, manufacturers and professional men. Such a list of indorsers would appeal to the pride and patriotism of any man.

"With this home backing I can no longer hesitate and I take this opportunity to thank my friends for their confidence in me and to assure them that I shall make the canvass for the republican nomination at the primaries next September.

"President Eliot says that civic administration is "business, business, business." I agree with him. The government of a great state like Michigan is a vast business enterprise and I am convinced that just at the present crisis the people of Michigan will welcome the application of sound business methods and principals to the affairs of state. Should I be elected governor it would be my single aim to apply approved business methods in all branches of the affairs of the commonwealth.

"I regard the great moral uprisal now prevading the country as an indication of the popular demand for better things in civic life. The large business enterprises of the world are demanding temperate, clear-headed and faithful men in their places of trust and employ. To my mind the temperance movement of today is a lasting and final expression of the aroused moral and business sense of the electorate to the necessity of requiring of all men sobriety in living and faithfulness to trust.

"In a few days I shall crave the indulgence of the good people of Michigan in allowing me to express at greater length the principles upon which I intend to make the canvass and which it shall be my purpose to carry out if I am called by the electors of the state to become their governor.

NEW BY-LAWS ARE ADOPTED

At Meeting of Western Michigan Development Bureau

JOHN I. GIBSON ELECTED SECRETARY

D. S. Payton Head of the Executive Committee

Will Try to Stop Dishonest Packing of Fruit—Will Make Large Exhibit at Chicago Next Fall.

Last Wednesday the board of directors of the West Michigan Development bureau held an important meeting at Traverse City, both of Charlevoix county, directors being present. The new articles of incorporation having been received back and filed the new by-laws were adopted. The bureau now having a legal existence, the following officers were elected.

President—D. H. Day, Glen Haven.

First Vice President—L. F. Perkett, Traverse City.

John I. Gibson of the Battle Creek Industrial association, was chosen as field secretary, and as soon as he can sever his connection with the Battle Creek Association he will locate in Traverse City and take up the work. Mr. Ellsworth will act as secretary until Mr. Gibson takes hold.

The following were elected members of the executive committee: the president and treasurer and D. S. Payton, Charlevoix; C. P. Buick, Traverse City; E. C. Rust, Pellston; M. B. Lang, Elk Rapids; T. M. Sawyer, Ludington; G. A. Brigham, Buckley; E. V. Wickham, Frankfort.

Fruit packers and growers who have been practicing the art of deception by packing cider apples and undergrade apples in the center of barrels while the large fruit was packed on the ends, will have to sit up and take notice that their practices must cease. The Western Michigan Development bureau went on yesterday for honest fruit packing, and if there is any way in which under the national pure food laws or legislation may be enacted whereby packed fruit, like lumber shipping, may be graded labeled with the packer's name and inspected, the bureau will make an effort to have such laws enacted. There was a lively discussion upon this subject, the concensus of opinion being that unless such practices as had been in vogue in the past were stopped, the fruit of the Grand Traverse region would be branded.

"We can talk about this until we are black in the face, and it will do no good," said L. F. Perkett. "We must have laws which can be enforced."

Another matter that came up for discussion was the campaign for 1910, it having been stated that since the big exhibit in Chicago the west was flooding the country with western literature, and that at the next exhibit which it to be held in Chicago next fall the west was planning on making an exhibit that would put Western Michigan in the shade unless the onslaught of the west was met by Western Michigan. That Western Michigan outshone the west at the exhibit is a foregone conclusion, but the west is not to be caught napping the coming year, and unless Western Michigan gets busy the coming exhibit will place Michigan in the class of the "also rans." The bureau will see that Western Michigan comes in an easy winner.

AID FOR ROCK ROADS

Native Limestones to Be Tested at Kansas University.

BY ENGINEERING DEPARTMENT

Counties and Towns May Have the Benefit For the Asking—Materials and Methods Found That Will Make Macadam Last Indefinitely.

The engineering department of the University of Kansas has decided to join the good roads movement. From now on it will be equipped to give the benefit of its testing laboratories to the counties and cities in the state of Kansas on road materials and methods. A bulletin will be published soon by the department giving the standard tests on more than 200 samples of limestone from the eastern half of the state. The regents established a testing station at Lawrence about a year ago, but up to this time there have been no funds to publish the results of the tests that have been made. The tests in the first bulletin are of stones available for macadamizing, of which there is practically an unlimited amount.

In 1905 Professor W. C. Hoad, who has charge of the work, had two senior students begin an investigation of the value of Kansas limestones for road-making, and they tested nearly a hundred samples. In the following year two more students, Edward N. Noyes and D. C. McConaughy, carried on the tests. Last year more tests were made from time to time until the department has a good idea of what limestones will make macadam roads. There is a wonderful difference in them, some being practically worthless, while others and they are in the majority—are first class material.

Two tests are applied, one to determine the toughness and wearing qualities of the stones and the other to determine the cementing properties of the powder that is made by the road roller and the wear of traffic. It sometimes happens that a stone that is good in one respect is worthless on account of the lack of the other quality. Wearing qualities are determined by the standard "rattler" test, which was originated in France thirty years ago. The samples of stone are broken into uniform pieces, so that fifty will weigh approximately eleven pounds. They are put into a "rattler," which consists of an iron cylinder, set at an angle of thirty degrees with the axis of rotation. In the test, lasting five hours, the cylinder is rotated 10,000 times, and the amount ground off the samples in that time by weight determines the measure of wearing quality of the stones. In making the cement test the powder is taken from the "rattler" and mixed with water. It is allowed to harden in cylindrical briquettes and is tested for its resistance under the trip hammer.

"We expect to be able to make tests from now on for any town or county that has a 'macadamizing project under way," said Professor Hoad. "and I believe the work will be a great thing for the good roads movement in the state. There are any amount of limestones which, if properly selected and put on the roads, will make roads that last indefinitely."

There are only six other testing stations in the United States that are equipped for the tests now being made at the university. The only other one west of Ohio is at the Iowa Agricultural college.—Kansas City Star.

FILLING RUTS IN A ROAD.

How the Work of Repairing Them Should Be Done.

With earth roads there is a pronounced tendency to rut, and when ruts begin to appear on the surface great care should be used in selecting new materials with which they should be immediately filled, says a bulletin of the department of agriculture. Every hole or rut in the roadway if not tamped full of some good material like that of which the road is constructed will become filled with water and will be made deeper and wider by each passing vehicle. A hole which could have been filled with a shovelful of material will soon need a cartful. The rut or hole to be repaired should be cleared of dust, mud or water and just such fine good fresh earth placed in it to be even with the surrounding surface after having been thoroughly consolidated with the pommier. Sod should not be placed on the surface. Neither should the surface be ruined by throwing upon it the warmest material from the gutters alongside. Ruts and holes should not be filled with stone or gravel unless a considerable section is to be so treated, for if such material is dumped into the holes or ruts it does not wear uniformly with the rest of the road, but produces lumps and ridges and in many cases results in making two holes for every one repaired.

RUTS THAT NEED TO BE FILLED.

Reversible road machines are often used in drawing the material out of ditches to the center of the roadway, which is left there to be washed again into the ditches by the first heavy rain. A far more satisfactory method when the roadway is sufficiently high and where a heavy roller cannot be had is to trim the shoulders and ridges off and smooth the surface with the machine. This work should begin in the center of the road, and the loose dirt should be gradually pushed to the ditches and finally shoved off the roadway or deposited where it will not be washed back into the ditches by rain.

ARE OUR ROADS TOO WIDE

German Highways Narrower, but Better Maintained, Says a C

The following information the superiority of the Germany as compared wi the United States is furnish ert J. Thompson, consul at Ha

German roads are perhaps su to a hundred times more traffic th similar roads in the United Stat These roads range from twenty t thirty feet in width, while in our mid dle and western states, where traffic is comparatively light, we take land of an average value of $100 per acre and cut it up with roadways sixty-six feet in width, practically two-thirds of the same being given over to weeds, which furnish an inexhaustible supply of seeds for the adjoining farm lands. The farmer in Germany who has conquered the weeds on his ground need have no thought of them being started again from uncultivated or uncared for land along the roadways. There are no weeds, no mud, no chuck holes, no sand stretches in the roads.

One of the simplest and most practical measures that could be taken for the betterment of roads in the United States would be to reduce their width to from one-third to one-half of what they now are.

In the United States public highways in the states given below may be estimated as follows: Minnesota, 80,000; Wisconsin, 80,000; Michigan, 80,000; Iowa, 70,000; Kansas, 70,000; Nebraska, 70,000; Missouri, 80,000; Illinois, 80,000; Indiana, 70,000; Ohio, 80,000; total, 700,000 miles. Reducing the width of these public highways, which now average sixty-six feet, to thirty-six feet would give [illegible] the farmers of these [illegible] cultivation 2,500,000 acres [illegible] liable land, which at [illegible] a gain of $100 per acre would [illegible] restoration to the productive [illegible] of the states named of $250,000,000.

Care of Horses' Teeth.

Horses seldom suffer from decayed teeth, but because of the upper teeth closing on the lower ones a little on the outside points are sometimes found which lacerate the cheek or penetrate the gums, creating a tenderness that prevents the proper mastication of food, annoying the horse so much that he falls away very rapidly.

Chapter 11

THE new partners, as soon as Orde had released himself from Daly, gave all their time to working out a schedule of tolls. Orde drew on his intimate knowledge of the river and the locations of the railways to estimate closely the time it would take to drive them.

At last Newmark expressed himself as satisfied.

"Now, Orde," said he, "here is where you come in. It's now your job to go out and interview these men and get their contracts for driving their next winter's cut."

"We've got to carry this thing through."

"Look here, Joe," Orde objected, "you can talk business to them better than I can."

"Not a bit," negatived Newmark. "They don't know me from Adam, and they do know you. We've got to carry this thing through at first on our face."

"All right," agreed Orde. "I'll start in on Daly."

The following morning Daly listened attentively.

"Well, Jack," said he, "I believe you can do it. I'd be only too glad to get rid of the nuisance of it, let alone get it done cheaper. If you'll draw up your contract and bring it in here, I'll sign it. I suppose you'll break out the railways?"

"No," said Orde. "We hadn't thought of doing more than the driving and distributing. You'll have to deliver the logs in the river. Maybe another year, after we get better organized, we'll be able to break railways."

"That was smooth enough sailing," exulted Orde to Newmark.

"Yes," pondered Newmark. "What was that about railways? What does that mean exactly?"

"Why," explained Orde, with a slight stare of surprise, "when the logs are cut and hauled during the winter they are banked on the river banks and even in the river channel itself. Then when the thaws come in the spring, these piles are broken down and set afloat in the river."

"I see," said Newmark. "Well, but why shouldn't we undertake that part of it?"

"It would hold back our drive too much to stop and break railways."

The next morning they took the early train for Monrovia, where were situated the offices of the nine other lumber companies.

Orde separated from Newmark to spend the rest of the morning with Heinzman, a very rotund, cautious person of German extraction and accent. Heinzman occupied the time in asking questions of all sorts about the new enterprise. At 12 he had not in any way committed himself nor expressed an opinion.

"I will see Proctor," said he.

Orde, rather exhausted, returned to find Newmark. The two had lunch together, after which Orde succeeded in getting two more promises of contracts and two more deferred interviews.

The following morning also he was much encouraged by the reception of his plan.

"That's four contracts already," said he, "and three more practically a sure thing. Proctor and Heinzman are slower than molasses about everything and mean as pusley, and Johnson's up in the air, the way he always is, for fear some one's going to do him."

But Heinzman offered a new problem for Orde's consideration.

"I haf talked with Proctor," said he, "and ve like your scheme. If you can deliffer our logs here for $2.25, why, that is better as ve can do it, but how do ve know you vill do it?"

"I'll guarantee to get them here all right," laughed Orde.

"But what is your guarantee good for?" persisted Heinzman blandly. "Suppose the logs are not delliffered—what then? How responsible are you financially?"

"Seventy-five thousand dollars."

"If you vill give a bond for the performance of your contract," pursued Heinzman, "that vould be satisfactory."

Orde's mind was struck chaotic by the request.

"How much of a bond?" he asked.

"Twenty fife thousand vould satisfy us," said Heinzman.

Orde hunted up Newmark.

"Heinzman has sense," said Newmark dryly after hearing Orde's story. "I was wondering if ordinary business caution was unknown out here."

"Nobody would go on my bond for that amount."

"We're just beginning to find out—"

"Yes, just beginning to find out—"

"Besides, he is going to buy some stock," added Orde after a moment.

"He was bluffing," said Newmark, "because he wanted to find out how much stock would be issued. You told him it would be a hundred thousand dollars, didn't you?"

"Why—yes, I did."

Newmark laughed.

"So now he knows that if we forfeit the bond he'll have controlling interest," he pointed out. "But what I can't make out is why he's so sure we'll have to forfeit."

"I think he's just taking a long shot at it," suggested Orde, who seemed finally to have decided against Newmark's opinion.

"Not he. He has some good reason for thinking we won't deliver the logs. Why does he insist on putting in a date for delivery? None of the others does."

"I don't know," replied Orde.

"You may you surely can get the drive through by then?"

Orde laughed.

"Sure! Why, it gives me two weeks' leeway over the worst possible luck I could have. You're too almighty auspicious, Joe."

Newmark shook his head.

"You let me figure this out," said he.

But bedtime found him without a solution. He retired to his room under fire of Orde's good natured rallyings still on his lips. With a sigh he fell asleep. Some time in the night he was awakened by a persistent rapping on the door. He lit the gas and admitted Newmark in his nightgown.

"Orde," said he briefly, "didn't you tell me the other day that railways were piled both on the banks and in the river?"

"Yes, sometimes," said Orde. "Why?"

"Then they might obstruct the river?"

"Certainly."

"I thought so!" cried Newmark, with as near an approach to exultation as he ever permitted himself. "Now, just one other thing. Aren't Heinzman's railways below most of the others?"

"Yes, I believe they are," said Orde.

"And, of course, it was agreed, as usual, that Heinzman was to break out his own railways?"

"I see," said Orde slowly. "You think he intends to delay things enough so we can't deliver on the date agreed on."

"I know it," stated Newmark positively.

"But if he refuses to deliver the logs no court of law will"—

"Law!" cried Newmark. "Refuse to deliver! You don't know that kind. He won't refuse to deliver. There'll just be a lot of inevitable delays, and his foreman will misunderstand, and all that."

Orde nodded, his eye abstracted.

Chapter 12

SUNDAY afternoon Orde, leaving Newmark to devices of his own, walked slowly up the main street, turned to the right down one of the shaded side residence streets that ended finally in a beautiful glistening sand hill. Orde seated himself on the smooth, clean sand and removed his hat. He saw these things and in imagination the far upper stretches of the river, with the mills and yards and booms extending for miles, and still above them the marshes and the flats where the river widened below the Big Bend. That would be the location for the booms of the new company—a cheap property on which the partners had already secured a valuation. To right and left stretched the long Michigan coast, with hills topped with the green of twisted pines, firs and beeches, with always its beach of sand, deep and dry to the very edge.

After he had cooled he arose and made his way back to a pleasant hardwood forest of maple and beech. Orde walked slowly farther and farther into the forest.

A fresh breeze darkened the blue velvet surface of the water, tumbled the white foam hissing up the beach, blew forward over the dunes a fine hurrying mist of sand and bore to Orde at last the refreshment of the wide spaces. A woman, walking slowly, bent her head against the force of this wind.

Orde watched her idly. He caught himself admiring the grace of her deft and sudden movements and the sway of her willowy figure.

As though directed by some unseen guide, her course veered more and more until it led directly to the spot where Orde stood. When she was within ten feet of him she at last raised her head so the young man could see something besides the top of her hat. Orde looked plump into her eyes.

"Hello!" she said cheerfully and unsurprised and sank down cross-legged at his feet.

Orde stood quite motionless, overcome by astonishment. Her face, its long oval framed in the bands of the

"Hello," she said

"You've got it on the market come and see me."

Newmark paused, his potato halfway to his plate.

"Kind of him," said he after a moment. "Did he sign a contract?"

"It wasn't made out," Orde reminded him. "I am to bring it in Monday."

They ate hungrily, then drifted out into the office again, where Orde lit a cigar.

"Now, let's see your memoranda," said Newmark.

He frowned over the three simple items for some time.

"It's got me," he confessed.

"What do you mean?" asked Orde in surprise.

"It all looks queer to me. Heinzman's got something up his sleeve. Why should he take a bond with that security from us? If we can't deliver the logs, our company fails; that makes the stock worthless; that makes the bond worthless—just when it is needed. Of course, it's as plain as the nose on your face that he thinks the proposition a good one and is trying to get control."

"Oh, no!" cried Orde, astonished.

"Orde, you're all right on the river," laughed Newmark, "but you're a babe at this game."

"But Heinzman is honest," cried Orde. "Why, he is a church member and has a class in Sunday school."

The features of Newmark's mouth were twitching quietly with amusement.

SAM BEAUBIAN

"Why, Miss Bishop," cried Orde, finding his voice. "What are you doing here?"

A faint shade of annoyance crossed her brow.

"Oh, I could ask the same of you, and then we'd talk about how surprised we are, won't we?" said she. "The important thing is that here is sand to play in and there is the lake, and here are we, and the day is charming, and it's good to be alive. Sit down and dig a hole! We've all the common days to explain things in."

Orde laughed and seated himself to face her. Without further talk and quite gravely they continued to scoop out an excavation between them, piling the sand over themselves and on either side as was most convenient. As the hole grew deeper they had to lean over more and more. Their heads sometimes brushed over so lightly; their hands perforce touched. She looked up happily at Orde, thrusting the loose hair from in front of her eyes.

She arose to her feet, shaking the sand free from her skirts. "Now let's go somewhere else," she said. "I think through these woods. Can we get back to town this way?"

"Yes," replied Orde. "The lumberjacks say that the woods are the poor man's overcoat."

Orde followed her in silence. She seemed to be quite without responsi-

PROFITABLE DAIRY COW.

It Is One That Will Convert Feed and Labor Into Profits.

According to a well known authority, the raising of the dairy cow may be summed up as follows:

A profitable dairy cow may be defined as one that will produce enough to pay for her feed, care, interest on the necessary investments and some profit besides. A profitable dairy cow, then, is one that will convert feed and labor into profits economically without removing the fertility from the farm.

The cost of keeping a dairy cow will vary according to locality and cost of feed and labor. Under ordinary conditions the cost of keeping an average dairy cow is about $35 per year. Three thousand pounds of milk testing 4 per cent fat contains 120 pounds of fat and yields about 2,500 pounds of skimmilk. The fat is worth about $30 and the skimmilk about $5, a total income of $35. Such a cow is not earning money very fast for her keeper. The only profit obtained is what the calf is worth and the fertility retained on the farm.

Many dairymen realize that it does not pay to milk the cow that produces only about 120 pounds of butter fat per year when it is so evident that a cow producing twice that amount can be secured by the application of a few simple principles. Improvement in the production of the dairy cows may be accomplished:

First.—By using a dairy sire whose dam, grandam and great-granddam have all been excellent and profitable dairy performers. The sire, if of pure blood, has more than half the influence on the character of the offspring. For this reason the head of the herd should be selected with extreme care.

Second.—By selecting for the future herd the heifer calves from the best producing cows.

Third.—By culling from the milking herd the poorest cows as fast as they can be spared.

Fourth.—By giving the cows the best of feed and care.

Some Uses of a Silo.

The Missouri experiment station has summarized the uses of a silo as follows: Silage keeps young stock thrifty and growing all winter. It produces fat here more cheaply than does dry feed. It enables cows to produce milk and butter more economically. Silage is more conveniently handled than dry fodder. The silo prevents waste of cornstalks, which contain about one-third the feed value of the entire crop. There are no aggravating cornstalks in the manure when silage is fed. The silo will make palatable feed of stuff that would not otherwise be eaten. It enables a larger number of animals to be maintained on a given number of acres. It enables the farmer to preserve feed which matures at a rainy time of the year when drying would be next to impossible. It is the most economical method of supplying feed for the stock during the hot, dry periods in summer, when the pasture is short.

Ensilage Hints.

Three tons of silage are generally counted equal in feeding to one ton of hay. A yield of fifteen tons of corn per acre is considered a fair one.

A silo is not an expensive structure. One built of staves to hold eighty tons can be built inside of a barn for $75.

Good silage depends on the stage of maturity of the corn, the air tightness of the silo and carefully filling the silo so that the silage will settle evenly.

An animal will consume about a cubic foot of silage (thirty to forty pounds) daily. This can be used as a basis for estimating the size of the silo needed.

Build the silo twice as high as it is in distance across. Make it air tight and strong enough to resist the lateral pressure, often amounting to several hundred pounds per square foot at the bottom.

Feeding the Rams.

Too much attention cannot be paid to the feeding of rams during the breeding season. The grain should be mostly oats, with the addition of some bran and linseed meal. Such fodders as vetches and rape, fed in sheds, have been recommended. The breeding season is a severe strain on the vitality of the ram, which has to be met by liberal feeding of grain and other foods in as great variety as possible. About one pound of grain daily will be required, with as much green food as the ram will eat. Some breeders prefer to keep the rams confined to pens by themselves, only allowing them to go to the ewes each morning.

Good Substitute For Silage.

For those who are not in a position to construct a silo on their places a good suggestion is made by an expert feeder. He says: "For one or two cows it is not a great deal of trouble to cut and steam the corn fodder fed to them. I put the bundles of corn through a hand feed cutter, put the cut fodder into a big box, pour on a kettle-ful of hot water and cover closely to steam for several hours. What grain I feed is sprinkled over the steamed fodder. Cows like it and eat it much cleaner than if fed uncut. The tough ends left make fair bedding and will mix well finally in the manure."

George Glados has just completed the work of installing an up-to-date soda fountain and serving counter, both of which are of mohogany and marble. The serving counter is arranged with plated recepticals for the syrup and cracked ice. Unique wash stands and dish racks are also installed. The mirror in the center is surrounded by cabinets trimmed with artistic work in colors forming enclosed glass shelves for displaying candies, etc. Mr. Glados has installed new electric fixtures Early in March he will repaint the interior all a mahogany finish!

As to that comet bogey. The fellow who will deliberately try to work up a panic among the people in regard to that thing ought to be taken out and hanged to the first lamp post. In the first place there is absolutely no such danger with the comet 30,000,000 miles away at the nearest approach, and were it true, and we were to be hit kersmack, there would be no dodging it unless we got off the earth or moved to Cadillac, so why indulge in a scare that either isn't true or can't be avoided.—Petoskey News.

John Rowson of Grand Rapids, chairman of the executive committee of the Michigan Masonic Home at that city, arrived here this morning and about noon received a long distance call stating that the institution was in flames. The report says the fire started in an air shaft at eight o'clock. The building, valued at $50,000, and the contents of $10,000 valuation are a total loss and partially insured. There are sixty-five inmates, whose ages average seventy-two, all of whom escaped.

Was a Success

The 10 cent supper given by the Ladies' Aid society of the Epworth church at the home of Mrs. Frank Brown was well attended, over one-hundred being present. Proceeds of $11.20 was added to the pastor's salary. Mrs. James McGeagh's school scholars of twenty years ago gathered in the dining room and gave three cheers for their former school teacher.

Possum Hunting In Queensland.

Among the ways of earning a living in the colony of Queensland the collecting of fur skins combines considerable profit with a fine, adventurous life in the open air in the "bush"—the term which describes all country parts, plain, hill and forest, away from the settlements. The possum is protected by the government of Queensland till May 1, on which date young men issue forth for a campaign against the wily animal whose skin makes such beautiful carriage and other rugs and forms the material for ladies' furs all over Europe. Formerly shooting was resorted to, but now trapping is found to be the most efficacious means of securing a good bag. Most of the trappers work in couples or employ a native, and snares of thin wire are used.

UNDER TWO FLAGS.

The Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes.

By ANNA BENTLEY.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

As soon as we had dropped anchor at Valparaiso Jack Hoskins, Tom Archard and I, having been cooped up aboard ship for three months without setting foot on shore, determined that we would get together if possible in the first liberty party and have a good time in the town. Hoskins was a reckless, fearless chap, Archard was not much better on the score of recklessness, while I was the only peaceable one of the trio.

"Now, Hoskins," I said before starting, "I wish you to understand that if you get us into a scrape while we're on shore you and I will not train together again."

"I'll be meek as Moses," he said.

"If he doesn't drink too much," Archard put in.

"Well," I added, "both of you remember that these Chileans are a mighty mean crowd to offend, especially for Americans, when there's not a United States armed ship in the harbor.

"NOW SHOOT IF YOU DARE!"

Having thus lectured my chums, we went ashore. We walked about arm in arm till we met a pretty Spanish girl who looked admiringly on Jack's stalwart figure, when he deserted us for her. I begged him not to go, for the girl was in company with a Chilean, who seemed to me to be both to turn her over to an American sailor. But the fellow made no objections, and Jack succeeded him. Whether this had anything to do with what followed I don't know, but I have always suspected that it had.

Tom and I roamed the town alone, looking in at the shop windows, taking in one or two shows, and when tired lounged in the tropical gardens, though the perfume of the flowers was rather sickening to me. Finally we concluded we'd better go and look after Jack.

We started up from the garden where we were sitting at the time and went out into the streets. We hadn't proceeded far before we saw Jack coming toward us. When we met we saw at once that he had been taking aboard more spirits than was good for him. He began to tell us very loudly what a fine time he had had. He had soon parted with the girl, who couldn't speak a word of English, and joined a party from the ship who were having a fine spree.

All of a sudden a policeman appeared and, drawing a sword, hit Jack with the flat of it. Before we could interfere Jack planted his fist under the policeman's chin, raised him off his feet and sent him sprawling on the pavement.

I knew very well that there was but one chance for Jack. If we could run him to the shore, get him into a boat and out to the ship there might be some hope of getting him out of the scrape without serious consequences. Quick as a flash I seized one arm; Tom, following my cue, seized the other, and we set off as rapidly as we could get Jack on for the place where we knew the boats to be.

After turning a corner I released Jack's arm and shouted, "Run, Jack—run for your life!" If he hadn't been drinking he might have got away. As it was the policeman signaled for assistance, and very soon several of the force were on our track. They reached us just before we could get into a boat.

Jack was arrested and marched back to the town. Tom and I followed him, a policeman on either side of him and several in the rear, and saw him taken into the police office. We were not allowed to go in ourselves, but loitered outside till we were thunderstruck at being informed by a man who came out of the building that Jack Hoskins had been summarily tried for attacking a policeman and had been condemned to be shot the next morning. At first we thought the man was hoaxing us; but, getting the same information from others, we made up our minds that it must be true.

After a hurried consultation we determined first to go and inform the American consul of the circumstance, then go to the ship and tell the captain. The consul, however, was the proper person to act in the matter, and we went with him as he hurried away to do what he could in the name of the United States government to save Jack's life. He at first expostulated against the barbarity of executing a man for resisting a wanton attack of a policeman, but as the authorities turned a deaf ear to his expostulation he made a formal protest. No more attention was paid to the protest than to the expostulation.

That night was a distressing one for all our crew, and, as for Jack, it only remained for him to prepare for death. Our captain could do nothing. If the Chilean authorities would not respect a representative of the United States they would not pay any attention to the captain of the crew to which the offender belonged. The harbor was not only bare of a United States fighting ship, but did not contain one of any other nation.

Not a wink did I sleep that night, and when it was light enough for me to see I was scouring the harbor in the hope that some sort of a fighting machine had come in during the night. But I was disappointed. The waters were entirely bare of guns.

The condition of our crew was harrowing. We wanted to fight and had nothing to fight with. To permit one of our number to be shot to death by a lot of Spanish American undersized bloodthirsty rascals well nigh threw every man of us into spasms. We got together in knots, and many were the foolhardy plans that were proposed to save our comrade's life. But as time wore on and the hour appointed for the execution approached an awful sense of our powerless position settled down upon us and stunned us.

Early in the morning I was made the bearer of a note from our captain to the consul. The captain dared not leave the ship for fear of some move on the part of the men which would not only be hopeless, but get us into more trouble. I was the only man of the crew to go ashore. While I was at the consulate a crowd was gathering in a field in rear of the house to witness the execution. What the note contained I don't know, but on reading it the consul shook his head.

At that moment I saw the British consul, whose house was opposite, come out to raise the British flag. He stood looking at the crowd in the field, and I saw the British bulldog indignation rising in him at the murder about to be committed. With the flag still in his hand he came across the street and, approaching the American consul, said to him:

"You're not going to let them shoot that man, are you?"

"What can I do?" replied the consul despairingly. "I have protested against the act. I am powerless to do more."

Meanwhile Jack had been marched out, and a firing squad was taking position before him.

"Give me your flag!" shouted the English consul. And in another moment the stars and stripes were clutched in his hand with the union jack. Then hurrying across the field, I and our own consul following him, we saw him elbow his way through the crowd and run up to the prisoner. The next instant the United States flag was folded around Jack's broad shoulders, and immediately after the blood red banner of Great Britain was placed over it. Then the consul who had done this, standing a few paces back, faced the firing squad and cried defiantly:

"Now shoot if you dare through the heart of England and America!"

This was not much for the dagos. If the moral power of the United States did not scare them that of the two most powerful nations on the earth and, what was more to them, on the sea was more than they dared defy. Then, too, this combined moral power was displayed in a way to give it full force. To deliberately shoot a man through the two flags representing the two wings of the great Anglo-Saxon race required a nerve that even the valiant Chileans did not possess.

After a hurried consultation the Chilean authorities, suddenly stricken with terror at what they had done and realizing what they had intended doing, instead, to release the prisoner. He was delivered to the American consul. With tears streaming down his cheeks he gratefully pressed the hand of the man who had saved him. Then he grasped that of the American representative. Lastly he permitted me to take his hand in mine.

Who gave the news of Jack's release to those on board our ship I don't know, but shortly after it occurred, when Jack and I went down to the ship's boat that had brought me ashore and which was waiting for me, we saw the crew dancing about, running up the rattlines and hoisting all the signal bunting there was to be had. When we left the shore there was a cheer, while we pulled for the vessel there were cheers, and when Jack climbed the ladder and stepped over the gunwale he found himself on the shoulders of the strongest and tallest men on the ship and was carried around amid a scene of wild rejoicing.

It is a long, while since that narrow escape—a tragedy averted by the presence of mind of one man. Where Jack Hoskins is now I don't know, since that was in the days of our youth. Our sailor days have long been over, and we have been long parted. But there is one scene which for dramatic interest stands far ahead of all the events in my life. It is Jack wrapped in two flags, with a firing party before him and the British consul darting the dagos to fire on him, piercing as they must the emblems of old England and her stalwart son, the United States of America.

The main feature about this story is that it is true. The only difference between the arrest, condemnation and intended execution of Hoskins at Valparaiso and this account is that it is here given in story form.

The estate of David Ward manufactured last year at its big saw mill at Deward, on the Detroit & Charlevoix railroad, which is owned by the Michigan Central, 32,137,140 feet pine and 3,169,315 feet of hemlock a total of 35,306,364 feet. It also manufactured 6,833,500 pieces of lath and 1,115,000 shingles. The output of this mill is probably the largest of any Michigan saw mill last year and by far the largest in pine lumber.

One of our state boards furnishes an example that is truly refreshing in these days of graft and muckraking. A recent audit of the books of the barber's board shows the astonishing result that there is $1,931 of cash on hand in excess of what the said books call for, and also that since 1889, this board has turned into the state treasury $35,100. That's a board worth having.

The town of Lewiston situated in the southwestern corner of Montmorency county will soon cease its existence as an incorporated village and will be but a hamlet of empty dwelling houses and forsaken business places. This information was learned when it was authoritatively announced that in a short time the mills there would be permanently closed and eventually torn down. Seventeen years ago the Michelson & Hanson Lumber company bought up a vast tract of pine and hardwood timber lands in that region and built mills to cut the timber. Since that time the mills have been operated almost continuously day and night necessitating the employment of a large force of men, who built homes and founded the town. But now those tracts of land are devastated and the country for miles around is stripped bare of all standing timber. Only a few more weeks run remains and then the lumber industry will be a thing of the past in that section. It is said that even now the Michigan Central is planning to tear up the Twin Lake branch of its line, which runs into Lewiston from Grayling. It is understood that the lumber company has sold the mills to L. Jenson of Salling, who will ship the more valuable machinery to the upper peninsula, where he has timber holdings.

Old License Debts.

Another thing, the charge will be made that the increase in taxes is due to the fact that the county receives no money from the saloon license this year. The increased taxes in this county will be charged by the liquor people to local option. The charge will not be true, but it will be made just the same. As a matter of fact, the debts of the county have been acquired under license. On the first of January 1909, when the taxes just began to come in, the county owed $19,167.88, and at this time the county owes $13,121.32. These facts are not brought out with a view of finding fault, but for the purpose of suggesting that this thing of taking over from year to year the accumulated debts of the county only makes a larger tax and a heavier loss to pay some time in the future, and while these debts were incurred under license, when it is paid it will be charged up to local option, although the change from license to local option has practically had nothing to do with it.

This matter is presented with the best intentions and not with a view of telling the board how they ought to conduct their business, just to place before the people the situation as it is, so that no matter what action the board may take this fall, the public will understand that the increase in taxes this year or next year or whenever the board decides that these debts shall be paid, is not due to local option, but is simply clearing up a debt that was created under the license system—Hillsdale Herald.

Horse Spectacles.

The business of one well known firm of opticians in England consists largely in the manufacture of horse spectacles. The object of the spectacles is to promote high stepping. They are made of stiff leather, entirely inclosing the eyes of the horse, and the glasses used are deep, concave and large in size. The ground seems to the horse to be raised, and he steps high, thinking he is going uphill or has to step over some obstacle. This system of spectacles is generally adopted while the horse is young, and its effect on the action is said to be remarkable. It has been discovered that the cause of a horse's shying is, as a rule, short sight.

direction proved that he was not forgotten. Finally they emerged from the beech woods.

She turned and waved her hat at the beech woods falling counter against the lowering sun.

"Goodby," she said gravely, "and pleasant dreams to you. I hope those very sunny little birds won't keep you awake." She looked up at Orde. "He was rather nice to us this afternoon," she explained, "and it's always well to be polite to them anyway." She gazed steadily at Orde for signs of amusement. He resolutely held his face sympathetic.

"Now I think we'll go home," said she.

They made their way to the edge of the small hill. The low slanting sun cast across the vista a sleepy light of evening.

"How would you like to live in a place like that all your life?" asked Orde.

"I don't know." She weighed her words carefully. "It would depend like the place isn't of so much importance. It seems to me. It's the life one is called to. It's whether one finds her soul's realm or not that a place is livable or not."

"Good night."

Orde looked out over the raw little village with a new interest.

Her whole aspect seemed to have changed with the descent into the conventionality of the village street. The old, gentle, though self contained reserve had returned.

"I came down with Jane and Mrs. Hubbard to see Mr. Hubbard off on the boat for Milwaukee last night," she told him. "Of course we had to wait over Sunday. Mrs. Hubbard and Jane had to see some relative or other, but I preferred to take a walk."

"Where are you staying?" asked Orde.

"At the Bennetts'."

They said little more until the Bennetts' gate was reached. Orde declined to go in.

"I want to thank you," she said. "You did not once act as though you thought I was silly or crazy. And you didn't try, as all the rest of them would, to act silly too. You couldn't have done it. Oh, you may have felt it—I know!" She smiled one of her quaint and quizzical smiles. "But men aren't built for foolishness. They have to leave that to us. You've been very nice this afternoon, and it's helped a lot. Good night."

Orde, however, walked back to the hotel in a black rage with himself over what he termed his imbecility. As he remembered it he had made just one consecutive speech that afternoon.

"Joe," said he to Newmark, "what's the plural form of incubus? Isn't it 'husses?'"

"Incubi," answered Newmark.

"Thanks," said Orde gloomily.

Chapter 13

"I HAVE Heinzman's contract all drawn," said Newmark the next morning, "and I think I'll go around with you to the office."

They found the little German awaiting them. Newmark immediately took charge of the interview.

"I have executed here the contract and the bonds secured by Mr. Orde's and my shares of stock in the new company," he explained.

Heinzman reached his hands for the papers, beaming over his glasses at the two young men. As he read, however, his smile vanished.

"Vat is this?" he inquired, crispness in his voice. "You tolt me," he accused Orde, "dot you were not prepared to brenk out the rollways. You tolt me you would eggspect me to do that for myself. Well, why do you put in this?" reading from the paper in his hand:

"In case said rollways belonging to said parties of the second part are not broken out by the time the drive has reached them, and in case on demand said parties of the second part do refuse or do not exercise due diligence in breaking out said rollways, the said parties of the first part shall themselves break out said rollways, and the said parties of the second part do hereby agree to reimburse said parties of the first part at the rate of a dollar per thousand board feet."

"That is merely to protect ourselves," attack in Newmark.

"But," exploded Heinzman, his face purpling, "a dollar a t'ousand is absurd!"

"Of course," agreed Newmark. "We expect it to be. It is intended as a penalty in case you don't break out your own rollways in time."

"I vill not stand for such foolishness;" pounded Heinzman.

"Very well," said Newmark crisply, reaching for the contract.

But Heinzman clung to it.

"It is absurd," he repeated in a milder tone. "See, I vill strike it out." He did so with a few dashes of the pen.

"We have no intention," stated Newmark, with decision, "of giving you the chance to hang up our drive."

Heinzman caught his breath.

"So that is what you think?" he shouted. He tore the contract in pieces and threw it in the wastebasket. "Get ought of here!" he cried.

Orde's hands twitched nervously.

"You to refuse our offer?"

"Refuse! Yes—you and your whole cabbodle!" yelled Heinzman.

Once in the open street Orde drew a deep breath of relief.

"Whew!" said he. "That was a terror! We've gone off the wrong foot that time."

Newmark was amused.

"You don't mean to say that fooled you!" he marveled.

"What?" asked Orde.

"It was all rubbish. He saw we had spotted his little scheme, and he had to retreat. It was as plain as the nose on your face. We've got an enemy on our hands in any case and one we'll have to look out for. He'll try to make trouble on the river. Perhaps he'll try to block the stream by not breaking his rollways."

The partners hunted out the little frame building in which Johnson conducted his business.

"I see no use in it," said Johnson. "I can run me own widout help from any man."

"Which seems to settle that!" said Newmark to Orde after they had left.

"Now," said Newmark as they trudged back to their hotel, "this proposition of Heinzman's has given me an idea. I'm not going to try to sell this stock outside, but to the men who own timber along the river. Then they won't be objecting to the tolls, for if the company makes any profits part will go to them. I'll take these contracts to show we can do the business, and I'll see about incorporation and get a proper office and equipments. Of course we'll have to make this our headquarters."

"I, suppose so," said Orde a little blankly. After an instant he laughed. "Do you know, I hadn't thought of that!"

"Also," went on Newmark calmly, "I'll buy the supplies to the best advantage I can."

"And I?" inquired Orde.

"Get the booms built and improve the river. Begin to get your crew. You can start right off. We have my money to begin on."

Orde laughed.

"My! She's a nice big job, isn't she?" he cried joyously.

A good way to cure cows troubled with this is to separate the affected cows from the herd and milk them last. Wash the hands in a solution of half an ounce of hyposulphite of soda to the quart of water before and after each cow is milked.

Balzac's Poverty.

An anecdote of Balzac shows the strange condition of poverty in which he lived even after he had won fame. He made a visit one evening to the house of one of his pet admirations, Rossini, where he found a party assembled and among them a great singer, then the rage, who had decided to favor the company. Ignorant of this, Balzac begged her to sing a song. "For you? Why, of course, at once." And she did. "Who on earth can that be?" asked an astonished guest of Rossini. "Don't you know? It's M. de Balzac." "Oh, really! Then no wonder."

And all the morning Balzac had been trying to borrow a few francs.

NEBULA HYPOTHESIS.

One of the Most Interesting Propositions of Science.

WHAT IT ACTUALLY MEANS.

That the Sun, Planets and All Matter Were Once a Vast Mass of Incandescent Gas All Jumbled Together In an Enormous Chaotic Cloud.

Everybody has heard the phrase, the nebula hypothesis, but what is it?

In a few words this is the meaning of "nebula hypothesis:" That the sun, the planets and all that is in them were at one time in the incomprehensibly remote past a vast mass of chaotic, incandescent gas all jumbled together in an enormous nebula, or cloud.

To begin with, the first conception that science has dared to make, however, takes us one step further back without mentioning the origin of matter itself science conceives that in the beginning all matter was uniformly distributed throughout space – that there were no stars, no planets, no satellites, but that all space was filled with the matter we now have divided up into very fine particles some distance apart. The consistency of such material was perforce very thin indeed, much more rarefied than the highest vacuum we can obtain now by air pumps. From this state to the nebulous state the theory has a missing link, one that can only be satisfied by supposing divine command, for it assumes, in the words of Professor Todd, that "gradually centers of attraction formed and these centers pulled in toward themselves other particles. As a result of the inward falling of matter toward these centers, the collision of its particles and their friction upon each other the material masses grew hotter and hotter. Nebulae seeming to fill the entire heavens were formed—luminous fire mist, like the filmy objects still seen in the sky, though vaster and exceedingly numerous." This process is supposed to have gone on for countless ages, faster in some regions than in others. Many million nebulae were formed and set in rotation around their own axes. This happily can be explained by science. Whenever particles are attracted toward a center and are kept from falling directly to this center a whirlpool is formed, rotating in one direction. An example of this, though humble and not exactly analogous, is the rotation of water in a basin when the stopper is pulled out of the bottom. Gravity attracts the water immediately above the hole, which starts flowing out, thus leaving a space to be filled. The rest of the water rushes in from all sides to do this, and the whirlpool is the result.

Now each of these whirling nebulae became exceedingly hot, and each formed what is known as a star or sun, our sun being one. The earth and other planets had not then come into separate existence, of course, as it is supposed that they were thrown off later from the sun.

Our sun in its nebulous form and rotating swiftly on its axis gradually flattened at its poles on account of centrifugal motion. This phenomenon is entirely familiar to those who have seen a ball of clay on a potter's wheel gradually flatten. The motion was so swift and the mass so nebulous that the sun to be took the shape of a disk. As time went on the outer part became cool and somewhat rigid, while the inner part continued its cooling and contracting. Thus the inner part drew away from the outer, leaving a ring of matter whirling around on the outside. This breaking off of the ring is supposed to be hastened by the inability of the outside to keep up the swift motion of the central mass, both on account of the slight cohesion and of the centrifugal force. But this particular part of the argument has nothing to stand on if the first law of motion is true.

In the successive stages of the sun's contraction this process was repeated over and over again, until several rings were whirling around the central orb. They would necessarily be in the same plane. Now, these rings, not being uniform in mass or thickness, would each gradually accumulate toward the densest portion until they, too, would form a ball which would subsequently flatten, and if the substance continued nebulous and the ball was large enough they would also slough rings.

Of course the rings the sun discarded have become the planets, which, as required by the theory, are all very nearly in the same plane. The rings that the planets formed have become moons or satellites. So we are driven to conclude that our sun at one time filled all the space from its present position to the farthest planet in the solar system.

From this theory there is another thing that we have to believe, and that is that every star in the heavens has gone through this same process and has a family of planets sailing around it, just as our sun has. It would be impossible to see these planets, of course, for it is impossible to see a star, even with the greatest telescope, except as a mere point of light.

As regards the proving of this nebula hypothesis, of course it cannot be done. But everything points to its accuracy. Many nebulae are seen even now among the stars that seem to be going through the delayed process of world forming. Around one of the planets of our own solar system, Saturn, are three rings, which are probably destined in time to become moons. In the opinion of some scholars.—A. T. Hodge in New York Tribune.

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson grange met in regular session Saturday, February 12, with an attendance of twenty-six members.

Worthy Master George Todd called the meeting to order and one bill was presented and allowed.

Last year's woman's work committee gave a report of their work during the year and then the worthy master proceedrd to the appointment of committees for the ensuing year. The master also ordered that the charter be draped for a period of thirty days in memory of our departed Brother Reuben St. John.

The lecturer's hour was taken up with songs, readings and recitations.

Grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks.

The Efficiency of Blood.

From recent experiments made it was shown that the animal bred for beef purposes is about 20 per cent more effective in converting feed into beef than is the scrub animal. In other words, the animal bred to make beef makes it at an economy of about 20 per cent as compared with the scrub. Furthermore, the beef made at this economy is the best from a nutritive standpoint, containing more dry matter. Of course there is another great advantage not recorded by digestion experiments—namely, that the pure bred or beef bred animal puts his flesh where it is worth the most money. This has been generally recognized, but the advantage of economy in maintenance and gain has not been demonstrated before. For generations breeders and feeders have believed in it, but were unable to prove it. One more point for which breeders have contended has now been proved by a most delicate instrument in the hands of a great investigator.

What to Feed the Calf.

Say what you please, raising a calf by hand is not nature's way and is not so good, but the difference in cost is supposed to make up for defects.

When the calf sucks, it gets a tiny stream of milk that is well mixed with saliva, which flows copiously at the same time. This saliva is very necessary to digestion. It is really more important than the butter fat that is skimmed out. Milk may be too rich in cream for the calf.

If the calf drinks its milk it takes it too fast for the saliva to mix with it properly; hence the digestion will not be perfect. But is there no way to improve the usual drinking method? There is, at least to some extent. It is to feed a small quantity of milk at a time, say, about a pint. This gives time for saliva to collect in the calf's mouth between drinks, and the effect is much better.

Farm and Garden

ICE FOR THE FARM HOME.

How to Secure and How to Store the Crop For Future Use.

Ice is as workable as wood, so it can be either split or sawed into desirable sections for handling and storing. Commercial ice making is generally carried on with an eye single to rapidity rather than accuracy in cake dimensions, so the ice plow is used and the cakes split off, thus leaving the under side of each cake irregular, making close storage impossible. The slower and better process for the farmer is the ice saw or, in lieu of this, the common crosscut saw, which is found on nearly all farms. Lake or pond ice has the preference over river ice, due to the fact that there is no current beneath. Pond ice freezes thicker and is less liable to contain air bubbles, meaning clearer and more uniform cakes.

Avoid slush or snow ice as much as possible. Watch for those several days of continuous hard freezing, then tap the ice field at its best. Six inch ice is of course good, but eighteen inch is better, as the thicker the cake the better its keeping quality. Clear the field of snow and with either line or straightedge mark off the cakes to be cut, using any sharp pointed instrument for the marking. An old file makes a good tool for the purpose. Mark the field off into eighteen inch squares, being careful to have cakes cut exactly to measure, for in no other way can close storage be accomplished. Cut out corner cake with an ax and start the saw exactly on the line, holding saw straight up and down. Remove one handle from the saw and in its place attach a small weight, said weight adding much to the rapidity of the sawing. Two pairs of ice hooks at about 50 cents each complete the outfit for the farmer's ice harvest.

In building an icehouse get good, smooth drop siding for the outside and paint it. For the inner or any cut lumber will do, for all that is necessary is something to hold the sawdust used in packing from the outer wall. Leave spaces between studding open at the top. To accomplish this the inside sheathing should stop at about four inches below the plate at top of studding, thus allowing the side air to flow out and over the stored mass, thence out through small windows which should be provided in each end of the building and as near the peak as possible. These openings should be filled with upward slanting blinds, thereby forcing inflowing air currents upward and away from the ice, insuring free circulation at all times. These openings should never be closed, for through them must escape dampness that stored ice always produces.

The size of the building must be determined by the amount of ice to be used. If for family use only, then 12 by 14 feet, with eight foot studding, will give ample storage space, but for dairy use the building should be enlarged in proportion to the demands put upon it.

A Wisconsin farmer puts up such an icehouse as is shown in the illustration at a very low cost. Each winter he fills it when he could be doing little else. He has half a dozen customers to whom he supplies ice during the summer and makes a handsome profit from the transaction.

RATIONS ON THE FARM.

Principle Upon Which Regulated Stock Provender Is Based.

The farmer reads a great deal about feeding rations, much of which is all Greek. He is apt to class it among the "scientific talk" that does not directly appeal to his needed knowledge. This is a mistake. The agricultural colleges go deep into the matter and unearth truths that will greatly assist the farmer to reap a lot of good.

A little plain talk about what these rations mean may be of great worth to those who keep stock.

It is to be admitted that much is said in the agricultural journals on this subject that is not practical, but yet the application of a few primary principles to feeding suggests the way that practical feeds are doing things.

There are five classes of materials in feeding stuffs—viz, protein, carbohydrates, oil or fat, minerals and water. The mission of protein is to produce lean meats in the body, make blood, build up new tissues, etc. By carbohydrates is meant the starchy materials which give heat, fat and energy. They represent simply that part of hay, corn, potatoes and bread that goes to keep the body warm, produce energy for work and fat where the animal enlarges.

Cotton seed has a good deal of fat or oil, while corn has a moderate amount. The latter constituent, like starch, will also furnish heat, energy and fat and, being more concentrated than the starchy materials, will afford more than twice as much heat, fat or energy as will an equal amount of starch or sugar.

Mineral substances make teeth and bones and to a certain extent contribute to muscle and flesh. Professor Burkett of the Kansas experiment station says we take the bran from the wheat and give it to our cattle and pigs, giving only the soft white part of the wheat to our children, which is lacking in mineral materials. This is often the way with a good deal of our food. That explains why our children often have poor teeth and weak bones.

Plain common water is an important ingredient in foodstuffs. People must have protein for bone, muscle and blood. They must have starchy materials and fat to keep the body warm, to create energy and to make fat.

In corn alone there would not be sufficient protein to supply the wants of the body. To add timothy hay, for instance, to corn, as is so often done in feeding work horses, there would still be a lack of protein, as there is very little protein in timothy. But if, instead of feeding all corn, a few pounds of bran or cottonseed meal or linseed oil meal would be added, then you would more correctly balance the ration, supplying the protein.

The above ration is merely given to explain the point. That it can be improved upon there is no question. The secret in feeding, therefore, is to furnish the necessary ingredients in the proper proportion. When you feed corn, cottonseed meal, alfalfa and clover hays or the mixed ration you are supplying necessary materials for growth, maintenance and fat production.

C. The excavation so made, shall be filled from the depth of from 4 to 11 inches with coarse gravel, crushed stone or cinders, thoroughly wet with water and tamped.

D. Upon the foundation, so laid, there shall be evenly spread at least 4 inches of concrete, composed of four parts gravel, 2 parts clean, coarse sand and 1 part Elk Rapids cement or other cement that will stand an equal test therewith, all thoroughly mixed, both dry and wet, and tamped until water comes to the surface.

F. Upon the bed of concrete, so made, and before the material thereof has set, there shall be evenly spread one inch of cement mortar, composed of one part of good Elk Rapids cement, or other cement having an equal test therewith, and two parts clean, sharp sand free from clay, marl or other foreign substances, all thoroughly mixed, both dry and wet. This cement mortar shall be leveled with a straight edge to bring it to the established grade of the sidewalk, and floated and troweled until a smooth and finished surface is obtained, which surface shall be cut and separated into blocks to correspond with the block of the aforesaid bed of concrete, and the edges of each block shall be slightly turned and rounded, and if said walk is on a incline, or there be driveway or alley crossings, the surface of the walk shall be corrugated.

G. The name used in the construction of such walks shall be of dressed lumber, at least 2½ inches in thickness, fastened solidly and in a straight line along the established grade.

SECTION V.

It shall be the duty of the street commissioner of said city to superintend the construction of all sidewalks; to inspect the material used therefor, and the contractor building such sidewalk, shall submit to such commissioner for examination all material used or to be used by him in the construction of any sidewalk, for approval or rejection. And it shall be the duty of said street commissioner to examine such material as each piece of work, and to reject any and all that is defective, and cause the same to be removed from the work and to suspend the operations of the contractor until suitable material, complying with the specifications herein contained, is provided therefor.

SECTION VI.

It shall be the duty of the street commissioner to examine every piece of new sidewalk constructed within the corporate limits of said city, and within 10 days from the date of its completion make and file with the city clerk in writing, a full report of such examination, together with his recommendation thereon.

SECTION VII.

Ordinance No. 45, adopted May 17, 1901, entitled "An Ordinance to Encourage the Building of Cement and Brick Sidewalks in the Village of Charlevoix, by providing that the Village of Charlevoix shall pay a portion of the cost of said sidewalk," as amended by Ordinance No. 92, adopted May 18, 1901, and all other ordinances and parts of ordinances in any way conflicting with the provisions of this ordinance are hereby repealed.

This ordinance shall take effect 30 days from the date of its adoption.

TWO MIGHTY GOOD GAMES

Of Basket Ball were Played Saturday Night

EAST JORDAN DEFEATS CHARLEVOIX

Charlevoix High School Girls are Victors over County Normals

Charlevoix Boys Show Marked Improvement Since last Game.—Mancelona will Play here March 4.

Saturday night at Charlevoix theater two basket ball games were witnessed by the best and most enthusiastic crowd, of any game played in this city this season. Miss Gail Burns and Ethel Jacobs did excellent work with the girl's team of the high school. Miss Marion Swartz handles her position in good shape, while Miss Lulu Krulich, Vera Nuwland and Edna Ward show good points in blocking plays.

Louise Christensen of the Normal makes a good showing in basket work, Miss Scroggie shows ability for accuracy in field work. The other members of the team with more practice and good coaching, will form a strong team.

In the boy's game between East Jordan and Charlevoix, the locals displayed great improvement in allround playing. East Jordan gave them a fast race and defeat, but Charlevoix did the best playing they have done this season. Durgan comes into the game with a good jump and more speed, fielding the ball in Charlevoix territory in nearly every center play. Wallace showed great speed and accuracy while Jacobs did remarkable basket work. Paddock followed his man closely and blocked many plays for a gain. Mitchell's basket work was improved. If the team holds together for their practice under coach Brown Mancelona will have to hustle.

Burney and Burgman, for East Jordan, show close field work making baskets on long throws. Shier, Hart and Isaman at guards, fill their positions with speed and accuracy. Nachazel at center has a long jump, but played under a disadvantage. East Jordan had defeated Boyne City by a score of 22 to 11 the night before at East Jordan.

Following is the lineup of the girls:

C. H. S.	Position	C. N. C.
Ethel Jacobs	R. F.	Louise Christensen
Lulu Krulick	R. G.	Blanche Nowland

Bergman scores a one point basket, Charlevoix recovers and scores two points, through Wallace and then the locals foul. East Jordan fouls and Jacobs scores two foul baskets. Burney for the visitors fields two points, and Charlevoix again fouls. Jacobs scores two baskets of two points in the next series of plays. East Jordan fouls and Jacobs scores one point for the locals. Charlevoix fouls and Bergman scores one point. Ball goes to Charlevoix territory and time out. During the ten minutes intermission the band played more selections and yells were given by the line rooters.

SECOND HALF

Ball goes into Charlevoix territory and East Jordan gains one point by Bergman at Charlevoix's foul. Ball goes to East Jordan territory and Burney scores two points. Ball to Charlevoix field, and recovered by East Jordan. Durgan covers and Wallace scores two points. Charlevoix fouls and Burney scores one point. Ball goes to Charlevoix field and is covered by Shier and Burney scores two points. Ball to Charlevoix and East Jordan fouls. Jacobs fails to basket on the foul but recovers the ball and scores two points. Ball played to Charlevoix and Mitchell quickly executes a basket of two points. In the the next three plays East Jordan makes a gain of six by Nachazel, Borgman and Burney. Charlevoix play two successful baskets through Mitchell and Jacobs, and Charlevoix fouls. Ball is played to East Jordan's field and Isaman scores two points, followed by two plays of the same count by Burney and Nachazel. Ball goes to Charlevoix's field and Charlevoix fouls. Then the play is made by East Jordan and Charlevoix fouls. Bergman scores one point and time is called with the ball in Charlevoix territory.

Score 28 to 33 in favor of East Jordan. There will be but one more game this season. Mancelona plays here March 4, and have the strongest five in Northern Michigan, Charlevoix hopes to keep the score down.

Opportunity Knocks But Once.

A few pointers on the subject of light: Without light there is darkness.—We are the installers of the finest, best and most convenient of all lights—Electricity.

As to cost, maintainance, brilliancy and durability, there is no light that can compare with the electric light.

Be progressive and up-to-date.

On and after March 1 we will be in a position to wire your residence in the most approved manner at prices unheard of before.

The citizens of Charlevoix have more electricity at their command, and it is to the welfare of all taxpayers and property owners to keep the lighting plant on a paying basis, and in order to do that it will be policy to cut out John D. and his oil.

Your time is too valuable to spend it in filling, trimming and cleaning your oil lamps every day. Electricity costs but a little more and it is far superior. You have an hour's time consumed daily to be spent at leisure or otherwise.

When in need call BIT and talk the proposition over.

FRIDAY NIGHT

Extra Number of B. Y. P. U. Lecture Course

Twentieth Century Opportunities—Maurice Penfield Fikes.

Maurice Penfield Fikes D. D. two weeks ago was compelled to cancel his lecture date, February 11, on account of the death of his mother in the east. At that time the management were fortunate in obtaining Hon. Carl D. Thompson of Milwaukee, in his stead, who gave a very learned and acceptable lecture, well pleasing to all the patrons.

But a date has again been secured with Dr. Fikes, at a very large expense, and he will appear on the regular course as an extra number, next Friday night February 25.

Rev. Ehle, who has heard Mr. Fikes several times is loud in his praise as a brilliant public orator, a man with a message for the times; and is extremely solicitous that all our citizens who possibly can shall hear him, and guarantees that they will be gainers if they do.

Note what others say of him and his lecture. "Dr. Fikes is one of the youngest men on the platform with a reputation so extensive. He has worked his way up from the bottom. Has girdled the globe, only a few years ago, covering 33,000 miles by land and sea. Time and strength are not sufficient to meet the increasing calls outside his local sphere. He excels in poetic imagery and bursts of eloquence, which leaves lasting impressions upon the mind."—Brockway Lyceum Bureau, Pittsburg, Pa.

"Large Crowd at Vertieck theater. From the beginning to the very close Dr. Fikes held the closest attention of every man." Oil City, Pa.

"A brilliant orator, full of burning eloquence." "He held his listeners spell-bound." Wilmington, Del.

"Few men have more flattering indorsements than he, which is well deserved, for he is undoubtedly one of the most brilliant lecturers in the east today." Trenton, N. J.

No doubt this is a literary treat for Charlevoix, and the admission is within reach of all. Holders of regular season tickets are asked the small additional fee of 20 cents, which also reserves the same season seat, in auditorium, while the general admission is placed at 35 cents each.

Tickets for balance of course, four numbers, 75 cents. On sale at Fleischer's.

Baptist church Friday night 8 p. m. Please be prompt.

IF ELECTED GOVERNOR

Musselman, Osborn, Kelly and Montgomery Tell What They will Do

At the Meeting of Republican Editorial Association.

At the meeting of the Republican Editorial Association held at Lansing last week the four candidates for the Republican nomination for governor told how they would administer the office if elected.

Chase S. Osborn told the editors if he were elected he would endeavor to give Michigan such an administration as the late Gov. Johnson of Minnesota gave to that state.

Amos S. Musselman of Grand Rapids enumerated a long list of reforms which he would inaugerate if he became chief executive. Among them he would make it a rule to devote all of his time to the duties of the office to which he was elected. He would not make appointments according to the number of votes that an applicant for the position could control, but he admitted that he was a Zack Chandler Republican and believed that a man should look out for his friends.

Musselman said that if he were elected he would lay aside all business responsibilities "because the governor should devote all his time to the state's affairs." He would call together all state officers and constitute an executive committee. He would hold the head of every state department personally responsible for the affairs of his office. He is in favor of having a levy made to cover the deficiency estimated at $1,000,000 at the end of 1911 and in the future would be careful to cut down expenses.

Lieut-Gov. Kelly smiled his gladdest smile and informed the editors that they were the best fellows on earth, but hoped that they would make careful investigation as to where money was being spent before accusing the administration of recklessly squandering the state's cash.

Judge Montgomery covered practically the same ground as in his speeches at the various banquets about the state, declaring for examination of private banks, employers' liability law and civil service examinations for state employes. The judge stated that he was in full accord with every effort put forth to bring about equal taxation and to correct inequalities in the state equalization as between the several counties of the state, utilizing the state tax commission to furnish data to the board of equalization which is to meet in 1911, to secure as thorough an investigation as is possible of the alleged inequalities that exist in the various counties in the state, and to place upon the assessment rolls in the various localities property which it is now alleged, is undervalued or escapes taxation.

KIRBY—TYSVER

Popular Charlevoix Couple Married Tuesday Night.

About fifty people gathered at the home of Mrs. Tysver on the south side Tuesday night February 22 to participate in the wedding festivities of her eldest daughter, Mary E. Tysver, who was united to the bonds of holy matrimony, to Harker W. Kirby.

At precisely 7:30 to the strains of "Ferry Wedding March" played by Mrs. Floyd Bettis, the wedding party consisting of the officiating clergyman, the bride and groom and two attendants, being Miss Elizabeth Tysver, sister of the bride, and Mr. John Kirby, brother of the groom, took their places under a festoon of evergreens, banked by a large boquet of pink carnations, where a very impressive ring ceremony was performed by Rev. F. Dewey Ehle.

After congratulations, refreshments of ice cream and cake were served. The happy pair were the receipents of many beautiful and useful gifts, consisting of silverware, cut glass, china and linen. They are both popular young people, Mr. Kirby having served for several years as a pharmacist with a local firm and the bride having been one of our efficient school teachers for two or three years. Both are active and valuable members of the Baptist church.

They left today for Marion, Mich., where Mr. Kirby is employed as a pharmacist. All Charlevoix wishes them their best and hopes they will soon return to take up their abode in our midst.

CHARLEVOIX POMONA

Has Profitable Meeting with Wilson Grange Thursday

Deer Lake the Banner Grange will have Next Meeting April 21.

About one hundred members representing seven subordinate granges met in Pomona session with Wilson Grange Thursday, February 17. After enjoying a most bountiful spread, in which there was no apparent sympathy manifested for the "boycotting" of any article of diet, the meeting was called to order in the fifth degree by the Worthy Master. The roll call disclosed the fact, that with two exceptions, each officer was present.

The usual order of business was then taken up, the work being relieved from time to time by selections from the program previously prepared under the supervision of the Worthy Lecturer. The state speaker, being unaccountably absent, volunteer remarks were called for and several of the members responded in an interesting manner.

The Worthy Master withdrew as member of committee to draft Constitution and By-laws and Brother J. A. Newville was appointed in his stead. This committee is expected to report next meeting.

The discussion on the topic "Why Farm—Accounts—Should be Kept," led by Brother H. L. Olney evoked considerable interest, and several agreed to keep a strict bookaccount during the coming season, of at least a portion of their crops and to submit a report of same at its close.

The evening session was largely taken up with reports of committees. Of the twelve granges reporting, Deer Lake Grange was declared the banner grange of the county for the quarter ending January 1, Ironton Grange was a close second, having made the largest increase of membership during the quarter. The auditing committee reported cash on hand, $10.57. Two applications for fifth degree were accepted and candidates were obligated. After enjoying a very interesting program of recitations, songs, etc., Grange closed in form to meet with Deer Lake Grange, Thursday, April 21st.

COMISSION PLAN OF GOVERNMENT

A Question Which is Being Agitated in Charlevoix

WHAT THE DES MOINES PLAN IS

Galveston First City to be Governed by Commission

New Features Initative, Referendum and Recall Councilmen Elected at Large by Primary—No Partisan Tickets.

It has long been said that the weakest point in American institutions is the government of our cities. While this charge has been made by our critics, it will scarcely be denied by our friends. It is to obviate this very weakness that the plan of municipal government by commission is being adopted. Approximately seventy-five American cities have now put in operation the new method, and, in the main, the results have highly satisfactory. As important a municipality as Buffalo is now taking steps to apply the commission system.

The commission plan had its origin in Galveston, Tex., just after the big flood. This calamity was so staggering that the former city government admitted itself unequal to the task of rebuilding the city and erecting the sea wall for its future protection. One councilman proposed that he and all his associates resign, which suggestion was followed. Five commissioners were then elected who were business men and not politicians, and each of these men were placed at the head of a department of the city government. This was approximately ten years ago, and the new system, which came to be known as the Galveston plan, worked so well that other Texas cities adopted it, and from there it spread rapidly throughout the nation. Thus the tidal wave which swept over Galveston started another tidal wave which is sweeping the country. It is one of the traits of the American people to turn disasters into blessings, and there is perhaps no finer example of good growing out of seeming evil, than the new and better municipal government that has come as a direct result of the terrible Galveston flood.

The latest and most up to date form of municipal government by commission is an improvement on the Galveston idea and is known as the Des Moines plan. It provides for the election of five commissioners, one of whom is mayor, and in this respect is practically identical with the method in use in the Texas City. The new features are the initiative, referendum and recall. A certain percentage of citizens may initiate legislation, all public franchises except those of a minor character must be submitted to a popular vote, and if officials do not behave themselves the people may vote them out of office just as they are voted in. The Des Moines plan has now been in force nearly two years and has aroused the interest of many cities.

In Des Moines the commissioners are called councilmen. They are elected at large. First is held a primary, in which twice as many candidates are placed in nomination as there are places to be filled. Then several months are given the citizens to scan these candidates after which the regular election occurs. No party designations are placed opposite the names of candidates on the ballot. The aim is to make the issues one of personal fitness alone. In the case of the mayor the ballot contains directions to "vote for one" and in that of the councilmen to "vote for four." They are the only elective officers of the city, and full responsibility is concentrated in their hands. Other officials are chosen by the council through means of rigid civil service examinations. As far as possible partisanship is eliminated in every way. The mayor is little more than one of the council, though he has some extra powers, duties and salary. The present mayor is A. J. Mathis.

Straws

One of the men who make the engravings for this paper said to the editor some time ago, "Prohibition's coming in——(naming a northern state), all right!" "What makes you think so?" "Well, I have friends up there who have money invested in the brewing business, and they're getting it out as fast as they can!"

As The Union Signal has stated before, acres of storage space are required for the saloon fixtures returned to the brewers from voted out saloons. One great brewery, at least, it is reported, has begun burning these fixtures.

The same brewery is reported to be running only three days a week instead of seven days and seven nights, as formerly. And now comes the information, from a reliable source that the head of this brewery is quietly seeking to borrow money, advertising for small sums, under an agent's name.

The figures of the internal revenue department are all that is needed to show that the consumption of liquor is falling off.

Liquor men are desperate, and they continue to pour money without stint into anti prohibition campaigns. But there must be an ultimate limit to the source of supply, with prohibition territory increasing, and the liquor men's revenue constantly falling off.

This things are not reported in any spirit of exhaltation over another's loss: we should be glad to see these men prosperous, if they would earn their prosperity in a clean business.

In California and other wine growing states, the grapes are bought increasingly for unfermented grape juice. Breweries are said to be convertible into ice plants; and there will be increasing demand for commercial alcohol—a use for distilleries.

The facts cited point to the progress of an evolution. A number of months ago The Union Signal made the statement that men who have money invested in the liquor business will undoubtedly withdraw it as the profits of that business fall off before the advance of prohibition, so that by the time national prohibition is achieved there will be comparatively little loss to anyone through the closing of liquor plants. It is not necessary to repeat here that the prosperity brought by prohibition will provide employment for many times the capital now invested in liquor making.—Union Signal.

I have several good houses and lots in the city of Charlevoix, to trade for farms.

Zebu Beef In France.

French colonial authorities have inaugurated a serious attempt to introduce in the French market the zebu of Madagascar as a substitute for beef, says the Scientific American. The first batch of a dozen carcasses sold to the Paris stalls brought the prices of the highest grades of cattle. Herds of zebus, otherwise known as Indian oxen, which have been threatened with extermination, are now being rapidly restored, and probably 4,500,000 head roam the plateaus of Madagascar. The meat of the zebu is said to be savory, and nutritious and is equal to beef.

SCIENCE ON THE SOIL.

An Increase of Yield Obtained by Chemical Treatment.

This is the age of scientific farming. Take the results from grain by the application of phosphates to the soil. The lack of phosphates is not limited to the older sections of the country. In Wisconsin, for example, it has been customary in the wooded districts to clear but small fields and crop these fields continuously for a number of years very largely to grasses for hay, chiefly timothy. This practice has had the effect of greatly reducing the available phosphates of the soil, and in such cases exceptional care will be needed to restore the supply of available phosphates.

In the spring of 1905 a farmer in Wisconsin made an extensive experiment with phosphate on clay loam land which had not given satisfactory yields the preceding year. For this purpose he purchased four tons of acid phosphate, using it on oats seeded to clover and on corn in three different amounts—namely, 100, 200 and 400 pounds per acre. The result of this experiment is given in the following quotation from a letter from the experimenter:

"I am of the opinion the grain (oats) was thicker on the ground, and there were more oats at threshing than where the fertilizer was not used. On the heavier soils the difference was apparent very early in the season, and later on, when the grain headed out, the pieces could be picked out readily, the stand was thicker and more uniform—in fact, some of it was as nice oats as I ever saw stand up. I found that where we used 100 pounds it was somewhat better, when 200 pounds were used it was very much better, and when we used 400 pounds the best results were obtained. The benefit was even more apparent in the corn than in the oats, the stand was far better and more vigorous, towering above the other beside it, and the color, too, was different, being a rich green of a darker hue."

Similar experiments have been made in Illinois and Ohio.

The cuts here presented show the beneficial effect of acid phosphate on corn. An increased yield of large and well filled ears resulted where phosphate was used compared with a light yield and nubbins where none was used.

Thomas Bailey Aldrich once received a pathetic letter in a feminine hand announcing the death of a little daughter and asking if he would not send in his own handwriting a verse or two from "Babie Bell" to assuage the grief of the household. Aldrich sent the whole poem and not long after saw it displayed in the shop of an autograph dealer, with a good round price attached thereto.

FRESHENING UP GLOVES.

How the Chamois Skin Variety Can Be Washed and Cleaned.

To wash and clean chamois skin gloves draw a quart of very hot water in a basin and add to it a teaspoonful of salad or olive oil to each pair of gloves to be washed. After adding the oil add a cake of ivory or white castile soap and swish the whole into stiff lather, so that the oil is thoroughly mixed with the soapy water. Then add a quart more of hot water and then cold until the mixture is warm, but not more than comfortably warm. Remove the soap and beat up again with a large spoon, having not less than four or five quarts of the mixture for five pairs of gloves.

Drop the gloves in one by one and after letting them lie three minutes squeeze them gently for several minutes, rubbing with great care the soiled spots against the fingers. If the finger tips are much soiled castile or ivory soap may be rubbed directly in and immediately squeezed out, for the oil in the water will keep the soap so applied from stiffening the skin.

After, say, five minutes' squeezing take the gloves out and prepare a new water. If the gloves have not been allowed to become too soiled a thorough rinsing is now all that is necessary, and it is much better that the gloves be washed frequently than allowed to get so soiled as to wear out quickly in the laundering process.

The second water, and indeed every water used, should be of the same temperature as the first. If much soiled the same bath as the first should be used and the same process followed, rinsing them afterward in two clear warm waters, squeezing in each. If not much soiled the two rinsings may follow the first soap and oil bath.

The gloves should never be twisted or wrung, but squeezed very gently and at the end folded in clean towels and spatted and rolled carefully, then shaken out and hung in the air to dry.

Some gloves shrink lengthwise and some the other way in drying, and this should be counteracted by the careful use of a glove stretcher when the gloves are half dry. The fingers that are growing shorter, should be gently pushed out at the tips, and those that are growing into nail-like shapes should be as gently spread. Always it should be remembered that wet chamois is easily pulled in pieces, and the handling should be most gentle.

RENOVATING FURNITURE.

How it Can Be Cleaned and Brightened Up at Home.

Regular applications from week to week of linseed oil and turpentine in equal parts, rubbed in with a soft woolen cloth, will after a few weeks do much toward removing time stains from furniture and imparting the dull luster so much admired.

Dark hard woods may be rubbed occasionally with crude petroleum, though care must be used not to let it soak into the wood too long or a sticky surface will result, and to catch dust and to be very unpleasant to the touch. The petroleum should be rubbed off carefully with fresh cloths and a good supply of the old fashioned "elbow grease" applied. Indeed, some people claim that it is this part of the remedy which does the greater part of the good—not the chemicals and oils.

On wood that has been varnished the foregoing cleansers must not be used, but instead plain water or very strong cold tea. If there are deep scratches in the varnish, shellac varnish may be applied to them with a fine brush, care being taken not to let dirt or other matter get on the place till the shellac is thoroughly dry.

Leather covered furniture may be cleaned with warm milk, applied with a soft cloth and carefully rubbed till dry.

Another and more elaborate renovator is as follows, to be used when the leather is very old and shabby. Take a pint of linseed oil, boil it and let it stand until it is nearly cold; then stir in half a pint of vinegar. Stir till mixed, then bottle for use. When required shake the bottle well, pour a little on a soft cloth, rub well into the leather, turning the flannel as it gets dirty, then rub with a soft duster till the polish is restored. This softens the leather and prevents it from cracking.

When the coverings of upholstered furniture have become much spotted the dark spots may be removed by an application of chloroform and ether in equal parts, great care being taken to rub gently till quite dry, else light colored spots will result.

When light colored furniture has become generally soiled all over, not specifically spotted, it may be much freshened by rubbing with stale bread, as gloves and wall paper are treated.

How to Freshen Crushed Velvet.

Heat an iron without a handle, turn it upside down on a board and cover with a damp towel. Lay the back of the velvet from the steaming towel and brush the pile of velvet with a stiff brush. Move the velvet and dampen the towel as needed. This makes velvet as good as new.

How to Make Floor Polish.

An excellent polish for floors and oilcloths is made of equal parts of boiled linseed oil and turpentine. The candle ends that are left from decorating the dining room table are excellent for this purpose.

Electric power companies are being formed in Pennsylvania and other eastern states which are thickly settled to supply light and power to farms. One Philadelphia company is now making contracts over six counties.

Chapter 14

ON his return home late Monday afternoon Grandma Orde informed the river boss, with a shrewd twinkle that she wanted him surely at home the following evening.

"I've asked three or four of the young people for a family pull," said she.

"Who, mother?" asked Orde.

"Your crowd—the Smiths, Collinses, Jane Hubbard and Her," said Grandma Orde.

The young people straggled in at an early hour after supper. Orde stepped into the hall to help them with their wraps. He was surprised as he approached Carroll Bishop to lift her cloak from her shoulders to find that the top of her daintily poised head, with its soft, fine hair, came well below the level of his eyes. Somehow her poise, her slender grace of movement and of attitude, had lent her the impression of a stature she did not possess.

"Oh, it is so quaint and delightful," Carroll exhaled slowly. "this dear old house with its low ceilings and its old pictures and queer, unexpected things that take your breath away."

"It is one of the oldest houses in town," said Orde, "and I suppose it is picturesque. But, you see, I was brought up here, so I'm used to it."

"Wait until you leave it," said she. "Then all these things will come back to you to make your heart ache for them."

After the company had gone Orde stood long by the front gate looking up into the infinite spaces. Somehow, and vaguely, he felt the night to be akin to her elusive spirit. Farther and farther his soul penetrated into its depths, and yet other depths lay beyond, other mysteries, other unguessed realms. And yet its beauty was the simplicity of space and dark and the stars.

The next time he saw her was at the house of the friend she visited. Orde was lucky enough to find the girls home and alone. Jane made an excuse and went out. They talked with a considerable approach toward intimacy. Not until nearly time to go did Orde stumble upon the vital point of the evening. He had said something about a plan for the week following.

"But you forget that by that time I shall be gone," said she.

"Gone!" he echoed blankly. "Where?"

"Home," said she. "Don't you remember I am to go Sunday morning?"

"I thought you were going to stay a month."

"I was, but I—certain things came up that made it necessary for me to leave sooner."

"Will you write me occasionally?" he begged.

"As to that"—she began—"I'm a very poor correspondent. I do not make it a custom to write to young men."

"Oh!" he cried, believing himself enlightened. "Will you answer if I write you?"

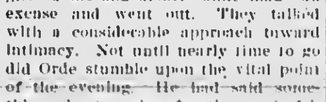
She began gently to laugh, quite to herself, as though enjoying a joke entirely within her own personal privilege.

"What is your address in New York?" demanded Orde.

She sank into a chair near by with a pretty uplifted gesture of despair.

"I surrender!" she cried, and then she laughed until the tears started from her eyes. "Oh, you are delicious!" she said at last. "Well, listen I live at 12 West Ninth street. Can you remember that?" Orde nodded.

Two days later Orde saw the train carry her away.



Chapter 15

THE new firm plunged busily into pressing activities. Orde constantly interviewed men of all kinds—rivermen, mill men, contractors, boat builders, hardware dealers, pile driver captains, builders, wholesale grocery men, cooks, axmen, chore boys—all a little world in itself.

Downstream eight miles, below the mills, and just beyond where the drawbridge crossed over to Monrovia, Duncan McLeod's shipyards steamed and beat and bolted away at two tugboats.

The spring burst into leaf and settled into summer. Orde was constantly on the move. As soon as low water came with midsummer he departed to Redding. Here he joined a crew which Tom North had collected and went to the head of the river. Far back on the headwaters he built a dam. The gate operated simply and could be raised to let loose an entire flood. And, indeed, this was the whole purpose of the dam. It created a reservoir from which could be freed new supplies of water to eke out the dropping spring freshets.

The crew next moved down ten miles to where the river dropped over a rapids full of bowlders. Here were built a row of stone filled log cribs in a double row downstream to define the channel and to hold the drive in it and away from the shallows. At the falls twenty-five miles below Orde purposed his most elaborate bit of rough engineering. The falls, only about fifteen feet high, fell straight to a bed of sheer rock. This had been eaten by the eddies into potholes and crannies until a jagged irregular scoop hollow had formed immediately underneath the fall.

In flood time the water roared through this obstruction in a torrent. The logs plunged end on into the scoop hollow, hit with a crash and were spewed out below more or less battered. Sometimes, when the drive brought down a hundred logs together, they failed to shoot over the barrier of the ledge. Then followed a jam, a bad jam, difficult and dangerous to break.

This condition of affairs Orde had determined, if possible, to obviate.

"If," said he to North, "we could carry an apron on a slant from just under the crest and over the potholes it would shoot both the water and the logs off a better angle."

"Sure," agreed North, "but you'll have him placing your apron with all that water running through. Why, it would drown us!"

"I've got a notion on that," said Orde.

Into the forest went the axmen. The straightest trees they felled, trimmed and dragged down travoy trails they constructed, on sleds they built for the purpose, to the banks of the river. Here they bored the two holes through either end to receive the bolts when later they should be locked together side by side in their places. As fast as they were prepared men with canthooks rolled them down the slope to a flat below the falls.

After the trees had been cut in sufficient number Orde led the way back upstream a half mile to a shallows, where he commanded the construction of a number of exaggerated sawhorses with very widespread slanting legs. When the sawhorses were completed Orde directed the picks and shovels to be brought up.

Orde set his men to digging a channel through the bank. It was no slight job, as the slope down into a swamp began only at a point forty or fifty feet inland; but, on the other hand, the earth was soft and free from rocks. When completed the channel gave passage to a rather feeble streamlet from the outer fringe of the river.

Next Orde assigned two men to each of the queer shaped sawhorses and instructed them to place the horses in a row across the shallowest part of the river and broadside to the stream. This was done. The men, halfway in, their knees in the swift water, bore down heavily to keep their charges in place. Other men laid heavy planks side by side perpendicular to and on the upstream side of the horses. The weight of the water clamped them in place. Big rocks and gravel shoveled on in quantity prevented the lower ends from rising. The wide slant of the legs directed the pressure so far downward that the horses were prevented from floating away, and slowly the bulk of the water, thus raised a good three feet above its former level, turned aside into the new channel and poured out to inundate the black ash swamp beyond.

"Why, it would drown us!"

A good volume still poured down to the fall, but it was so far reduced that work became possible.

"Now, boys!" cried Orde. "Lively while we've got the chance!"

The twenty-six foot logs were placed side by side, slanting from a point two feet below the rim of the fall to the ledge below. They were bolted together top and bottom through the four holes bored for that purpose. The task finished, they pried the flash boards from the improvised dam, piled them neatly beyond reach of high water, rescued the sawhorses and piled them also for a possible future use and blocked the temporary channel. The river, restored to its immemorial channel by these men who had so nonchalantly turned it aside, roared on. Orde and his crew tramped back to the falls and gazed on their handiwork with satisfaction. Instead of plunging over an edge into a turmoil of foam and eddies, now the water flowed smoothly, almost without a break, over an incline of thirty degrees.

"Logs'll slip over that slick as a gun barrel," said Tom North.

Quite cheerfully they took up their long, painstaking journey back down the river.

The fall led the crew through many minor labors, all of which consumed time. At Reed's mill Orde entered into diplomatic negotiations with old man Reed, whom he found singularly amenable. The skirmish in the spring seemed to have taken all the fight out of him, or perhaps, more simply, Orde's attitude toward him at that time had won him over to the young man's side. Orde's crew built a new sluiceway and gate far enough down to assure a good head in the pond above.

In September the crew had worked down as far as Redding, leaving behind them a river harnessed for their uses. Remained still the forty miles between Redding and the lake. Orde here paid off his men. A few days' work with a pile driver would fence the principal shoals from the channel.

He stayed overnight with his parents and took the train for Monrovia to meet Newmark.

"Hello, Joe!" greeted Orde, his teeth flashing in contrast to the tan of his face. "I'm done. Anything new since you wrote last?"

Newmark had acquired his articles of incorporation and sold his stock. Perhaps his task had in it as much of difficulty as Orde's taming of the river. Certainly he carried it to as successful a conclusion. The bulk of the stock he sold to log owners. Some blocks even went to Chicago. His own little fortune of twenty thousand he paid in for the shares that represented his half of the majority retained by himself and Orde. The latter gave a note at 10 per cent for his proportion of the stock. Newmark then borrowed fifteen thousand more, giving as security a mortgage on the company's newly acquired property—the tugs, booms, buildings and real estate. Thus was the financing determined. It left the company with obligations of $1,500 a year in interest, expenses which would run heavily into the thousands and an obligation to make good outside stock worth at par exactly $49,000. In addition Orde had charged against his account a burden of $2,000 a year interest on his personal debt. To offset these liabilities, outside the river improvements and equipments, which would hold little or no value in case of failure, the firm held contracts to deliver about 100,000,000 feet of logs. After some discussion the partners decided to allow themselves $2,500 apiece by way of salary.

"The only point that is at all risky to me," said Newmark, "is that we have only one season contracts. If for any reason we hang up the drive or fail to deliver promptly we're going to get left the year following, and then it's bust—bust."

Chapter 16

ORDE'S bank account, in spite of his laughing assertion to Newmark, contained some $1,000. After a brief but comprehensive tour of inspection over all the works then forward he drew a hundred of this and announced to Newmark that business would take him away for about two weeks.

At Redding, whither he went to pack his little sole leather trunk, he told Grandma Orde the same thing. She came and stood by the man leaning over the trunk.

"Speak to her, Jack," said she quietly. "She cares for you."

Orde looked up in astonishment, but he did not pretend to deny the implied accusation as to his destination.

"Why, mother!" he cried, "she's only seen me three or four times! It's absurd—yet."

"I know," nodded Grandma Orde wisely; "I know. But you mark my words—she cares for you."

She placed her hand for an instant on his shoulder and went away. The Ordes were not a demonstrative people.

The journey to New York was at that time very long and disagreeable, but Orde bore it with his accustomed stoicism. He had visited the metropolis before, so it was not unfamiliar to him. He made his way to a small hotel just off Broadway.

Orde ate, dressed and set out afoot in search of Miss Bishop's address. He arrived in front of the house a little past 8 o'clock and after a moment's hesitation mounted the steps and rang the bell.

The door swung silently back to frame no impressive manservant dressed in livery. To Orde's inquiry he stated that Miss Bishop had gone out to the theater. The young man left his name and a message of regret. At this the footman, with an irony so subtle as to be quite lost on Orde, demanded a card. Orde scribbled a line in his notebook, tore it out, folded it and left it.

He retired early and arose early, as had become his habit. At the office the clerk handed him a note.

My Dear Mr. Orde: I was so sorry to miss you that evening because of a stupid play. I come around as early as you can tomorrow morning. I shall expect you. Sincerely yours,

CARROLL BISHOP.

Orde glanced at the clock, which pointed to 7. He breakfasted and started leisurely in the direction of West Ninth street. He walked slowly. At University place he was seized with a panic and hurried rapidly to his destination. The door was answered by the same man who had opened it the night before. To Orde's inquiry he stated, with great brevity, that Miss Bishop was not yet visible and prepared to close the door.

"You are mistaken," said Orde, "I have an engagement with Miss Bishop. Tell her Mr. Orde is here."

The man departed, leaving Orde standing in the gloomy hall. That young man, however, parted the curtains leading into a parlor and sat down in a spindle legged chair.

For quite three quarters of an hour he waited without hearing any other indications of life than muffled sounds. Occasionally he shifted his position, but cautiously, as though he feared to awaken some one. Three oil portraits stared at him with all the reserved

TYPE OF THE HOLSTEIN.

Breeders Trying to Improve the Milk and Beef Form of This Breed.

With large size as the recognized predominant characteristic of the Holstein, aside from its beautiful black and white color markings in perfectly defined patches or spots, the next general definition relates to the general conformation of the animal. There are three different types, described as the milk and beef form, the milk form and beef and milk form, says an expert breeder.

The average form of this breed and that toward which conscientious breeders are directing their efforts to maintain and improve is the milk and beef form.

The milk and beef type of the breed is especially strong in all vital particulars. The bones are fine compared with the high and sharp chine of the extreme milk form. The loin and hips are broad and smooth and the rump high and level compared with the angularity usually shown in the milk form. The twist is roomy and the thighs and hocks well apart. Passing forward, the shoulders are smoother and more compact than in the milk form, but of lighter weight than in the beef form.

The brisket is not so wide and low as in the beef form, and the chest is not so deep, but the width of the beef form through at the heart is closely retained. In the milk form the abdomen is usually sprung below, and the ribs are steep, but in the milk and beef form the ribs are wider sprung and the abdomen more trimly held up though no less capacious. The general appearance of the bull is strongly masculine, but that of the cow is no less feminine than in the milk form.

It may be further emphasized that the milk and beef form describes a cow of the wedge form, with shoulders moderately thick, deep and broad, crops well filled, barrel well rounded loin and hips broad and full and quarters straight, wide and full. To this form of these cattle is due their extraordinary constitutional vigor or vital force, and it affects all their relations to their food, care and productions. The milk and beef form is not accompanied with the angularity of appearance, the light shoulders and chest and the comparatively tight quarters of cattle of the milk form.

Keeping Milk Utensils Clean

Discard the dishcloth and the dish towel when the milk utensils are being washed. Wash them in warm water first, with plenty of some washing compound, and use a brush to do the work, but never a rag. Get into every part of them, after which rinse off with clean warm water, and then either put them in boiling water or pour boiling water over them. Stand the parts up so that they will drain and use no cloth to wipe them. The hot surface will dry them quickly, and they will be clean. Leave the parts in a sunshiny place if possible.

Rustling Ability of Milk Goats.

The milk goat, like all goats, can make a living on brushy and hilly land where most other animals would starve. They are very beneficial to land in clearing it of weeds, sprouts and brush. They cannot endure low, wet land, but thrive perfectly on rough, hilly land. Those giving milk should be fed on good grass, hay, fodder and wheat bran, but no grain of any kind.

THE DAIRYMAN

Have some hard or vaseline handy to anoint sore teats. Sore teats and a tender udder often make the cow kick when otherwise she would not do so.

Care Should Be Taken While Milking.

No smoking or chewing of tobacco should be permitted while the milking is being done. The odor of the weed is quickly absorbed by the sensitive milk.

Stop the Cow From Kicking.

A kicking cow may often be cured by buckling a strap one inch wide around each hind leg a little above the hock, tight enough to compress the hamstring.

Use Only Pure Water.

Only pure water should be used in washing vessels. First rinse with warm water, then scald inside and out with boiling water. After that put out in the sun to dry.

For the Beginner.

In beginning select a few cows, grades if you like, keep a strict account upon the performance of your cows and cull all who do not more than pay their way.

Pet and Fondle the Calves.

The calves should be petted and fondled from babyhood when you expect to make milk cows of them. It is good even to rub their udders and develop in them the motherly cow nature.

Regularity Essential.

Regularity is essential to satisfactory performances of any good dairy cow. She must have her life regulated upon an almost clock like system the same hour each day for milking, feeding, grooming, pasturing, etc.

OPENING UP BRAZIL.

Amazon Valley Rich in Rubber and and Cotton Possibilities.

Bolivia east of the Andes is one of the richest regions of the world in timber, rubber and minerals, and it has some fine agricultural lands. It has no outlet on the Pacific coast. Its only outlet is through the Amazon and Para, and since peace was made with Brazil a railroad activity in this direction has taken possession of the whole republic.

East of Bolivia is the great Brazilian state of Matto Grosso, a territory nearly three times the size of Texas. A dozen large navigable rivers pour northeastward out of this state into the Amazon. Its agricultural, mining and grazing possibilities are very great.

It is said that a great deal of this territory will grow as fine long staple cotton as Mississippi or Alabama. The Brazilian government has matured a plan to connect by canal one of the tributaries of the Amazon with one of the tributaries of the La Plata in this state, thus opening an all inland water route from Para to Buenos Aires, a distance of nearly 6,000 miles. This extensive route would reach the whole interior of the continent.

Turning to the west and northwest, the Amazon is navigable in its chief tributaries in Peru, Ecuador and Colombia to the very walls of the Andes. One may go aboard a steamer at Para and remain aboard until it has plowed its way up to the hill city of Iquitos and several hundred miles beyond. Peru has little Pacific coast trade now, and the development of this country must pour its wealth into Para.

But if Brazil and Para had none of these Andean republics to draw trade from the development of the Brazilian Amazon valley alone must in time amount to untold wealth. In the states of Para and the Amazonas and the federal territory of Acre there are near the water's edge 10,000,000 rubber bearing trees of the Heven variety. These trees if properly tapped will live indefinitely and steadily increase their yield. The state of Para is considerably larger than Texas, and much of this state will grow excellent cotton. —Engineering Magazine.

A NOVEL CIRCULAR SAW.

Special Teeth Enable It to Cut Through Iron and Wood.

A circular saw has been invented and put to use by a Boston firm of building wreckers that will cut through nails and bolts as well as through wood and is proving so satisfactory that its users are advertising the making of new lumber from old. In the wrecking of old buildings much of the timber torn out has had to be sold simply as wreckage and often is practically valueless because nails spikes and bolts make the attempt to saw it up into regulation lengths and widths impracticable.

The saw which makes this possible is an ordinary circular saw fitted with specially constructed teeth, these being fitted to the inner part of its regular teeth. The teeth are about one and a half inches long, with a special groove on the outer part and a special catch groove inside, so as to fit on to the circular saw teeth. The cutting end is flat and sharp and is claimed to cut through iron, whether it be nails, spikes or bolts, as if it were wood. The breaking of one tooth, should this happen, only necessitates a minute's delay while another tooth is being put in its place.

Large timbers that formerly lay on the wreckers' hands are sawed neatly and quickly and are made to look like new timbers.—Popular Mechanics.

New Type of Bridge.

According to the Stockholm Dagblad, the chief of the Beton construction office has proposed for the new bridge over Trubebergssund a construction of a totally new type. The bridge suggested is a pontoon bridge, but differs from the usual type in that the pontoons are quite submerged and are anchored to weights resting on the bottom of the sea. The bridge, which is constructed with latticework, consists of long links thirty-five meters in length, each of which rests on two pontoons. The excess of sustaining power of the pontoons is so great that tramways passing over the bridge do not cause any depression whatever of the pontoons. The whole bridge remains thus perfectly still, independent of the water level.

Iron and Zinc Nails.

The life of iron shingle nails is about six years. An iron nail cannot be used again in putting on a new roof. Solid zinc nails last forever and can be used as often as necessary. As zinc is much lighter than iron, the cost of zinc nails is only about two and one-half times that of iron nails.

Chicago will next spring, under a local-option law, vote upon the question of the banishment of every saloon within its limits. An enormous petition bearing 75,000 names (14 more than necessary) was filed by the anti-saloon forces, and the question is sure to be submitted. This means one-third of the voters of Chicago are now known to be in sympathy with the movement to expel the liquor traffic. Already much more than half the extent of the city territorially is "dry" under the operation of this same local option law, and almost all of the adjoining suburban cities are also without saloons.

A copy of this folder will be sent to anyone by addressing H. F. Moeller, G. P. A., P. M. Ry., Detroit, or send the address of your friends in other states and a copy will be sent them free.

Literary Notes

Human Life for 1910

Other magazines cover the fields of fiction, history, science, etc., and do it well, but the exclusive field of human life,—with its wealth of material, stranger, more fascinating than any fiction ever penned,—is covered by but one publication, and this is Human Life. Its pages are an epitome of the vital history of this marvelous twentieth century.

Naturally, with such a field, no definite program for 1910 can be pre-arranged. At the threshold of the year who can tell what great events are in the making on the loom of time,—what vast discoveries, what revolutionizing inventions, what colossal undertakings?

Back of each and every one of them stands some man or woman whose brain and hand and unique personality make possible these things, and it is the intimate and wonderful life stories of these people that will fill the pages of Human Life for 1910.

For the immediate present Alfred Henry Lewis will continue his enlightening series on President Taft and the inside history of men and affairs at the nation's capital. Vance Thompson will be to the fore with an illuminating article on Jaures the Red Orator, his residence in Paris giving him peculiar facilities for getting at the inside facts in the matter. Charles Edward Russell will have an absorbing story on The "Mystery of Dreyfus," while the regular departments of "Celebrities of all Sorts," "Actresses of Today," "Modern Mortals," etc., will continue to be crisp, up-to-date and entertaining as ever.—Human Life Publishing Co., Boston.

UNDER TWO FLAGS.

The Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes.

By ANNA BENTLEY.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

As soon na we had dropped anchor at Valparaiso Jack Hoskins, Tom Archard and I, having been cooped up aboard ship for three months without setting foot on shore, determined that we would get together if possible in the first liberty party and have a good time in the town. Hoskins was a reckless, fearless chap, Archard was not much better on the score of recklessness, while I was the only peaceable one of the trio.

"Now, Hoskins," I said before starting, "I wish you to understand that if you get us into a scrape while we're on shore you and I will not trail together again."

"I'll be meek as Moses," he said.

"If he doesn't drink too much," Archard put in.

"Well," I added, "both of you remember that these Chileans are a mighty mean crowd to offend, especially for Americans, when there's not a United States armed ship in the harbor.

"NOW SHOOT IF YOU DARE!"

Having thus lectured my chums, we went ashore. We walked about arm in arm till we met a pretty Spanish girl who looked admiringly on Jack's stalwart figure, when he deserted us for her. I begged him not to go, for the girl was in company with a Chilean, who seemed to me to be loath to turn her over to an American sailor. But the fellow made no objections, and Jack succeeded him. Whether this had anything to do with what followed I don't know, but I have always suspected that it had.

Tom and I roamed the town alone, looking in at the shop windows, taking in one or two shows, and when tired lounged in the tropical gardens, though the perfume of the flowers was rather sickening to me. Finally we concluded we'd better go and look after Jack.

We started up from the gardens where we were sitting at the time and went out into the streets. We hadn't proceeded far before we saw Jack coming toward us. When we met we saw at once that he had been taking aboard more spirits than was good for him. He began to tell us very noisily what a fine time he had had. He had soon parted with the girl, who couldn't speak a word of English, and joined a party from the ship who were having a fine spree.

All of a sudden a policeman appeared and, drawing a sword, hit Jack with the flat of it. Before we could interfere Jack planted his fist under the policeman's chin, raised him off his feet and sent him sprawling on the pavement.

I knew very well that there was but one chance for Jack. If we could run him to the shore, get him into a boat and out to the ship there might be some hope of getting him out of the scrape without serious consequences. Quick as a flash I seized one arm; Tom, following my cue, seized the other, and we set off as rapidly as we could get Jack on for the place where we knew the boats to be.

After turning a corner I released Jack's arm and shouted, "Run, Jack—run for your life!" If he hadn't been drinking he might have got away. As it was the policeman signaled for assistance, and very soon several of the force were on our track. They reached us just before we could get into a boat.

Jack was arrested and marched back to the town. Tom and I followed him, a policeman on either side of him and several in the rear, and saw him taken into the police office. We were not allowed to go in ourselves, but loitered outside till we were thunderstruck at being informed by a man who came out of the building that Jack Hoskins had been summarily tried for attacking a policeman and had been condemned to be shot the next morning. At first we thought the man was hoaxing us; but, getting the same information from others, we made up our minds that it must be true.

After a hurried consultation we determined first to go and inform the American consul of the circumstance, then go to the ship and tell the captain. The consul, however, was the proper person to act in the matter, and we went with him as he hurried away to do what he could in the name of the United States government to save Jack's life. He at first expostulated against the barbarity of executing a man for resisting a wanton attack of a policeman, but as the authorities turned a deaf ear to his expostulation he made a formal protest. No more attention was paid to the protest than to the expostulation.

That night was a distressing one for all our crew, and, as for Jack, it only remained for him to prepare for death. Our captain could do nothing. If the Chilean authorities would not respect a representative of the United States they would not pay any attention to the captain of the crew to which the offender belonged. The harbor was not only bare of a United States fighting ship, but did not contain one of any other nation.

Not a wink did I sleep that night, and when it was light enough for me to see I was scouring the harbor in the hope that some sort of a fighting machine had come in during the night. But I was disappointed. The waters were entirely bare of guns.

The condition of our crew was harrowing. We wanted to fight and had nothing to fight with. To permit one of our number to be shot to death by a lot of Spanish American undersized, bloodthirsty rascals well nigh threw every man of us into spasms. We got together in knots, and many were the foolhardy plans that were proposed to save our comrade's life. But as time wore on and the hour appointed for the execution approached an awful sense of our powerless position settled down upon us and stunned us.

Early in the morning I was made the bearer of a note from our captain to the consul. The captain dared not leave the ship for fear of some more on the part of the men which would not only be hopeless, but get us into more trouble. I was the only man of the crew to go ashore. While I was at the consulate a crowd was gathering in a field in rear of the house to witness the execution. What the note contained I don't know, but on reading it the consul shook his head.

At that moment I saw the British consul, whose house was opposite, come out to raise the British flag. He stood looking at the crowd in the field, and I saw the British bulldog indignation rising in him at the murder about to be committed. With the flag still in his hand he came across the street and, approaching the American consul, said to him:

"You're not going to let them shoot that man, are you?"

"What can I do?" replied the consul despairingly. "I have protested against the act. I am powerless to do more."

Meanwhile Jack had been marched out, and a firing squad was taking position before him.

"Give me your flag!" shouted the English consul. And in another moment the stars and stripes were clutched in his hand with the union jack. Then hurrying across the field, I and our own consul following him, we saw him elbow his way through the crowd and run up to the prisoner. The next instant the United States flag was folded around Jack's broad shoulders, and immediately after the blood red banner of Great Britain was placed over it. Then the consul who had done this, standing a few paces back, faced the firing squad and cried defiantly:

"Now shoot if you dare through the heart of England and America!"

This was too much for the dagos. If the moral power of the United States did not scare them that of the two most powerful nations on the earth and, what was more to them, on the sea was more than they dared defy. Then, too, this combined moral power was displayed in a way to give it full force. To deliberately shoot a man through the two flags representing the two wings of the great Anglo-Saxon race required a nerve that even the valiant Chileans did not possess.

After a hurried consultation the Chilean authorities, suddenly stricken with terror at what they had done and realizing what they had intended doing, hastened to release the prisoner. He was delivered to the American consul. With tears streaming down his cheeks he gratefully pressed the hand of the man who had saved him. Then he grasped that of the American representative. Lastly he permitted me to take his hand in mine.

Who gave the news of Jack's release to those on board our ship I don't know, but shortly after it occurred, when Jack and I went down to the ship's boat that had brought me ashore and which was waiting for me, we saw the crew dancing about, running up the ratlines and hoisting all the signal bunting there was to be had. When we left the shore there was a cheer, while we pulled for the vessel there were cheers, and when Jack climbed the ladder and stepped over the gunwale he found himself on the shoulders of the strongest and tallest men on the ship and was carried around amid a scene of wild rejoicing.

It is a long while since that narrow escape—a tragedy averted by the presence of mind of one man. Where Jack Hoskins is now I don't know, since that was in the days of our youth. Our sailor days have long been over, and we have been long parted. But there is one scene which for dramatic interest stands far ahead of all the events in my life. It is Jack wrapped in two flags, with a firing party before him and the British consul during the dagos to fire on him; piercing as they must the emblems of old England and her stalwart son, the United States of America.

The main feature about this story is that it is true. The only difference between the arrest, condemnation and intended execution of Hoskins at Valparaiso and this account is that it is here given in story form.

Olson and two companions were driving and their horse became frightened by Sawyer's auto. All were thrown out and injured. Olson so badly that he died a few days later. It was proven that Sawyer drove his auto 200 feet after being warned that Olson's horse was thoroughly frightened. The auto was not stopped until after passing the carriage.

What seems like an important invention has just come to light in Reed City and consists of an oblong vehicle wheel, a wheel with two centers and yet without a center. It makes its own road, lays its own track, will run over rough ground much easier than the ordinary wheel and does not turn as the common wheel, but it is an oblong adjustable rim, which is the track, on the inside of which frictionless roller bearings run. It is the invention of G. E. Baker, who recently came here from Pentwater. A company has been formed to be known as the Baker Vehicle company. A patent is expected soon and manufacture of the wheel will be pushed.

Java Breadfruit.

Jack trees, another name for breadfruit, grow wild in Java. The trees are very straight and have trunks rising to nearly fifty feet. The fruit is thirty inches long and twelve inches broad, the weight often reaching 120 pounds. The flesh of the fruit is delicious, and the oily seeds are eaten roasted. The wood is a beautiful yellow in color and is hard enough to be used for furniture and cabinet work. When struck it gives a very clear note; hence bells are made of it, and pieces of the wood are also used by watchmen on mountains for giving signals.

MICROBES IN THE SCALP

The Latest Explanation is That Microbes Cause Baldness.

Professor Unna, of Hamburg, Germany, and Dr. Sabouraud, of Paris, France, share the honor of having discovered the hair microbe.

Baldness is not caused through a few weeks work of these hair microbes, but is the result of conditions brought about by their presence. Baldness may not occur until years after the microbes began work, but it is certain to come sooner or later.

The microbes cut off the blood supply. They feed on the fatty matter about the roots of the hair, through which the blood is absorbed. Finally the fatty matter is consumed, the food supply of the hair is gone and it starves and finally dies.

Resorcin is one of the most effective germ destroyers ever discovered. Beta Naphthol is a most powerful, yet absolutely safe germicide and antiseptic, which prevents development of germ matter, and creates a clean healthy condition.

Pilocarpine although not a coloring matter or dye, is an ingredient well established for its power to restore natural color to human hair when loss of color has been caused by a disease.

Borax, because of its well defined softening and cleansing properties, is most useful in the treatment of scalp and hair diseases. Glycerine acts as a stimulant to the hair bulbs, and has a soothing, healing and nourishing influence. Alcohol is indispensable in medicine because of its antiseptic, stimulating and preservative qualities.

We want every one who has scalp or hair trouble to try Rexall "93" Hair Tonic, which contains all these ingredients. If it does not give you complete satisfaction in every particular, we will return every penny you paid us for it, for the mere asking and without question or formality.

Of course you understand that when we say that Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will grow hair we do not refer to cases where the roots are entirely dead, the pores of the scalp closed, and the head has the shiny appearance of a billiard ball. In cases like this there is no hope. In all other cases of baldness Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will grow hair, or cost the user nothing. Two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can get them in Charlevoix only at our store.—The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, A. B Fleischer, proprietor.

atoofness of their painted eyes. He began to doubt whether the man had announced him at all

Then, breaking the stillness with almost startling abruptness, he heard a clear, high voice saying something at the top of the stairs outside. A rhythmical swish of skirts, punctuated by the light pat-pat of a girl tripping downstairs, brought him to his feet. A moment later the curtains parted, and she entered, holding out her hand

He stood holding her hand, suddenly unable to say a word, looking at her hungrily. A flood of emotion, of which he had had no prevision, swelled up within him to fill his throat.

"It was good of you to come so promptly," said she. "I'm so anxious to hear all about the dear people at Redding."

The sounds in the next room increased in volume, as though several people must have entered that apartment. In a moment or so the curtains to the hall parted to frame the servant.

"Mrs. Bishop wishes to know, miss," said that functionary, "if you're not coming to breakfast."

Orde sprang to his feet.

"Haven't you had your breakfast yet?" he cried, conscience stricken.

"Didn't you gather the fact that I'm just up?" she mocked him. "I assure you it doesn't matter. The family has just come down."

"Speak to her, Jack. She cares for you."

"But," cried Orde, "I wasn't here until 9 o'clock.—I thought, of course, you'd be around. I'm mighty sorry"—

"Oh, la, la!" she cried, cutting him short.

Orde was for taking his leave, but this she would not have.

"You must meet my family," she negatived, "for if you're here for so short a time we want to see something of you. Come right out now."

Orde thereupon followed her down a narrow, dark hall to a door that opened slantwise into the dining room. With her back to the bow window sat a woman well beyond middle age, but with evidently some pretensions to youth. She was tall, quick in movement. Dark rings below her eyes attested either a nervous disease, a hysterical temperament or both. Immediately at her left sat a boy of about fourteen years of age, his face a curious contradiction between a naturally frank and open expression and a growing sullenness. Next him stood a vacant chair, evidently for Miss Bishop. Opposite lolled a young man, holding a newspaper in one hand and a coffee cup in the other. He was very handsome, with a drooping black mustache, dark eyes, underlashes almost too luxuriant and a long, oval face dark in complexion and a trifle sardonic in expression. To vis-a-vis to Mrs Bishop was the gray haired General Bishop, Carroll's father. Miss Bishop performed the necessary introductions. General Bishop arose and grasped his hand.

"Mrs. Bishop wishes to know if you're not coming to breakfast."

Gerald Bishop cast an ironically amused glance across at Orde, and the mother would barely notice the sunburned, ungainly looking riverman.

Carroll Bishop appeared quite unconscious of an atmosphere which seemed to Orde strained, but sank into her place at the table and unfolded her napkin. The silent butler drew forward a chair for Orde and stood looking impassively in Mrs. Bishop's direction.

"You will have some breakfast with us?" she inquired. "No? A cup of coffee at least?"

She began to manipulate the coffee pot without paying the slightest attention to Orde's disclaimer. The general puffed out his cheeks and coughed a bit in embarrassment.

"A good cup of coffee is never amiss to an old campaigner," he said to Orde. "It's as good as a full meal in a pinch. I remember when I was a major in the Eleventh, down near the City of Mexico, in '48, the time Hardy's command was so nearly wiped out by that ambuscade"— He half turned toward Orde, his face lighting up, his fingers reaching for the fork with which, after the custom of old soldiers, to trace the chart of his reminiscences.

Mrs. Bishop rattled her cup and saucer with an uncontrollably nervous jerk of her slender body: "Spare us, father," she said brusquely. "Will you have another cup of coffee?"

The old gentleman looked a trifle bewildered, but subsided meekly.

Orde, overwhelmed by embarrassment, discovered that none of the others had paid the incident the slightest attention. Only on the lips of Gerald Bishop he surprised a fine, detached smile. The butler brought a letter for Mrs. Bishop. The contents seemed to vex her.

She began to abuse the writer, a seamstress, for a delay in the finishing of an altar cloth and then transferred the blame to her children. It was a painful test for Orde. He finally rose. "I must be going," said he.

"Well," Carroll conceded, "I suppose I'd better see if I can't help mother out. But you'll come in again. Come and dine with us this evening. Mother will be delighted."

Mrs. Bishop departed from the room Orde bowed to the other occupants of the table.

Orde was immediately joined on the street by young Mr Bishop, most correctly appointed.

"Going anywhere in particular?" he inquired. "Let's go up the avenue, then. Everybody will be out."

They walked for some distance

"Your father was in the Mexican war?" said Orde,

"He was a most distinguished officer."

"What command had he in the civil war? I fooled around that a little myself."

"My father resigned from the army in '54," replied Gerald.

"That was too bad; just before the chance for more service," said Orde

"Army life was incompatible with my mother's temperament," stated Gerald. "You are from Redding, of course. My sister is very enthusiastic about the place. You are in business there?"

Orde gave the latter a succinct idea of the sort of operations in which he was interested.

"And you," he said at last—"I suppose you're either a broker or lawyer."

"I am neither," stated Gerald. "I have sufficient income to make business unnecessary. There is plenty to occupy one's time. I have my clubs, my gymnasium, my horse and my friends. That is my gymnasium," pointing to a building on a side street. "Won't you come in with me? I am due now for my practice."

Pumpkins That Talk.

Even the farmer, once the type of simplicity and now progressiveness, is learning how to advertise through his knowledge of the weaknesses of nature. One of these weaknesses is found in the lordly pumpkin. Ifraise a growing pumpkin until the scar will never be cleared away, but will show in the ripe pumpkin in the shape of delicate little yellow warts. Starting with this principle alone, shrewd farmers have made their pumpkin farms valuable. After the vegetables get good sized and prove that they will be fine ones they go into the patch and with a sharp stick scar them so that when they are ready for market their happy lines bear in words of warts legends like these: "Eat me at Smith's." "Smith will make pies of me soon." "Brown's pies are best." "Jones' pies are delicious." "You can eat me inside."

The wily farmer hauls these warty fellows to market and, ending Smith, Jones and Brown from their respective restaurants, shows the strange freak of nature. Of course a sale is made on sight, and the pumpkin lies at the front of the restaurant for a few days to astonish passersby until it must be made into pies to save it. Then the farmer discovers another freak pumpkin, suitably marked, to repeat it. Fancy prices are to be had for these pumpkins, and stony patches that would never pay taxes in any other crop produce wealth in pumpkins.

New Plants.

But few farmers have any idea of the great work our government is doing in the way of introducing new plants and fruits from the old world into the United States. During the last fiscal year more than 2,000 seeds and plants were brought in. The department of agriculture has explorers constantly on the outlook for all kinds of plants and fruits that seem capable of good yields in our own country. They are picked up especially in Manchuria, Korea and China. There are specimens from wild apricot trees ten feet in diameter. There are wild grapes and wonderful persimmons and bush cherries and other curious and valuable specimens that most of us never even dreamed of

The main advantage of having a small forge on a farm is not so much the saving of money as the saving of time. A little job of repairing can be done in the time that it would take to get to town and back, and the cost of the work is saved besides. A good portable forge can be bought for $6

GRAVEL MADE ROADS

Highway Engineer Shows Why They Are Easily Built.

ROADBED MUST BE KEPT DRY.

Surface Should Be So Shaped That Water Will Run Off and Not Penetrate—Value of Underdrains, Side Ditches and Rolling.

At a meeting of the Missouri Highway Engineers' association, held at Jefferson City, F. P. Spalding of Columbia, Mo., read a paper on gravel roads and said in part:

Gravel or broken stone when used for a road is intended to form a hard surface, which will resist the wear of the traffic and which will shed the water without softening in rainy weather or when snow is melting. The gravel, or macadam, is not in itself a rigid structure, but depends upon the firmness of the earth below to carry the loads which come upon it. The object of the gravel is to make the surface harder and more resistant to wear and the action of water than the earth surface that it replaces, and it can only be effective when the road below it is properly shaped and drained and when the surface has such form as to cause the water which falls upon it to quickly run off without penetrating the road.

Filling mudholes with gravel is not making a gravel road. This is only wasting good material. I can recall a mudhole into which gravel was regularly dumped every spring for years, and each time when the ground thawed out in the following spring the mud was again on top and ready to swallow another dose of gravel. Probably there is enough gravel in that hole, 200 or 300 feet long, to make a mile of good gravel road. Finally a road supervisor came along, who put in a few hundred feet of tile and crowned the road surface, and there has been no mudhole there since.

The form which should be given to an earth roadbed and the methods of drainage to be used depend in each instance upon the local conditions surrounding the road. The ability of earth to sustain a load depends in a large measure upon the amount of water contained by it. Most earth forms a good foundation so long as it is kept dry, but when wet it loses its sustaining power, becoming wet and incoherent. When softened by water soil is easily displaced by the settling of the road or forced upward into any space that may exist in it. In order, therefore, that the loads may be uniformly sustained and the surface of the road kept firm and even it is of first importance that the roadbed be kept dry. The improvement and maintenance of a road are therefore largely questions of drainage, the objects being to prevent water from reaching the road and to provide means for immediately removing such as does reach it before the soil becomes saturated and softened.

Surface drainage is always necessary if the body of the road is to be kept in a dry condition and is accomplished by having the surface of such form that water falling upon it will quickly run into the gutters. Underdrains will not drain water from the surface of a road, and unless the crown is at all times maintained and the surface kept smooth water is likely to stand upon the surface and penetrate into the road. And this is just as true of a gravel or stone road as of the earth surface.

At the side of the road longitudinal ditches must be provided for the purpose of carrying the water drained from the surface of the road to some point where it may be turned into a natural drainage channel. In many instances these side ditches also carry drainage from land adjacent to the road. The size and form of the gutters will naturally depend upon the quantity of water to be carried and the slope of the gutters. Where the quantity of water to be carried is small the extension of the slope of the road surface may be sufficient without any special gutter being provided.

In forming a roadbed upon which to place a gravel or macadam surface the earth roadbed should be made as firm and smooth as possible before the placing of the surfacing material. Wherever possible the earth after being brought to grade and given the proper form for receiving the surface should be rolled with a heavy roller until it is firmly packed and able to yield efficient support to the surface. In any case the surface should not be placed until the roadbed is thoroughly settled and packed in place.

Deer Lake Grange No. 1269.

Deer Lake grange met in regular session February 19, with Worthy Master Barber in the chair. The finance committee reported $6.95 in the treasury. The dance committee turned in $8.35 and $11.80 was received for dues, leaving a balance, after payment of bills, of $26.11.

Carl Ginisch, George Scott, Bertha Anderson, Edith McGeorge, Ethel Northon, Frank Way, Oral Barber and Fred Olf were initiated in the first and second degrees.

Under good of the order it was decided to have a New England supper at the hall March 17, accompanied by a good program, consisting of music, recitations, readings and songs. Supper to be as old-fashioned as possible. Ladies to wear short dresses if they wish and no rats in their hair. Everybody come for a good time and fetch a green ribbon.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm Grange met in regular session Saturday evening.

Grange was called to order at nine o'clock with Worthy Master St. John in the chair. After vacancies were filled we proceeded to the regular business of the order. The light committee reported having purchased the light apparatus. The apparatus consists of two 500 candle power lights and a tank gengrator capable of generating 2500 candle power. It was thought best to get a generator of this size so that in case we should, in the future purchase more lamps, we would not be obliged to change tanks.

Recess was taken after which we proceeded with the lecturer's hour, which was carried out with songs, recitations and discussions.

In the discussion of "Why the Boys leave the Farm," opinions differed, some believing the reason was that the boys were obliged to work too hard, and felt because they believed they could get a living with less manual labor.

Discussion—"Why are Beets not more Extensively Raised in this Community?" The general belief was that the farmers had not learned to raise them in the easiest way, also that the work was harder to do, requiring more hand labor than any other crop.

Moved and carried that we hold a dance March 3. Numbers will be sold and the supper will be sold in boxes as at box socials. A ticket on a quilt will be given both to the lady and gentleman. Grange closed in form. One application for membership was received.

HILL ROADWAY WORK

Suggestions For Making a Quick Drying Road.

HOW TO GET RID OF WATER.

Carry It Directly Across by Sloping Highway From Bank Side—Pointers on Grading—Change Suggested In King Drag For Hill Work.

I have always been very interested and observant in the matter of country roads and have read many valuable articles on the subject. But I still think there are some points that I have not seen touched upon relative to roadmaking, especially in the hill country along the Mississippi and Missouri slopes.

The great object of road work should be to get the water away as quickly as possible. We have a good soil for roadmaking, but the hills are of silt formation, and a stream of water crumbles them like so much beef sugar.

Many of our experienced roadmakers will throw up a hill grade and carry the water down each side for long distances. Then comes a heavy rain fall. Forty thousand rivulets from the hillside above pour into the drains and such a volume of water accumulates as to cut deep gorges. These make the road almost impassable and require several days' labor a number of times each year to repair. To avoid this trouble the road may be sloped from the bank side enough to carry the water directly across the road.

When a grade is desired on a side hill roadway plow in three furrows on the lower side, the outside furrow to be about twenty feet from the bank. When grading draw this loose dirt toward the center of the roadway with a slope of about one inch to the foot, carrying this slope across the entire grade. The ditch thus made should be opened at short intervals to let out the water.

After the grading is done headers should be put in to divert any water that might follow the wheel track. To make these headers scrape with the slusher a trench a little diagonally across the grade about two scrapers width and not deep. Deposit this dirt with more from the outside alongside the trench, making the ridge no higher than absolutely necessary to accomplish its purpose and not less than ten feet wide, thus causing as little obstruction as possible. This plan will always provide a quick drying hill road. With the occasional use of a King drag this can be kept like a boulevard.

Mr. King is an enthusiast on the merits of his invention and thinks lightly of any changes that may be made in it, but for the benefit of those not so sanguine I will describe my improvement, to be used more particularly in a hill country.

We are all familiar with the construction of Mr. King's drag. Now, instead of making this drag rigid by tight mortises, tenons, etc., we use two 4 by 6 inch crosspieces with 3 by 6 inch tenons six inches long on each end. The shoulders of these tenons are mitered each way from the center. These fit mortises in each end of the plank. The mortises are mitered from the center to each side. The tenons are secured with one inch hardwood pins outside of the plank, thus allowing the frame to oscillate. The utility of this may be seen when we want to carry the dirt all one way on side hills, etc. We pull through as far as desired, then change the team, hitch to the opposite side, turn around and continue moving the dirt as before. If properly made this drag will pull in a direct line and do better work.

When the highway is cut through a hill it is desired to keep roads off the grade. To this end work the road against—one land, leaving a ditch on one side only. Turn all the water from above and along the hill into this ditch. Plow it in repeatedly each season. After this trench has washed too much for safety smooth this side and change the ditch to the opposite side of the road and repeat. You will be surprised at the change in steepness effected in ten or twelve years.—W. S. Wiley in Good Roads Magazine.

VALUE OF DRAGGING ROADS.

How Farmers Can Make Boulevards Out of Neglected Rural Highways.

The Mount Joy Star and News of Pennsylvania tells in one of its issues of how a farmer in that locality has been making good roads by his own individual effort. The newspaper item reads as follows:

Frank L. Nissley, a progressive farmer residing at Ironford, believes in having good roads and is so emphatic on the subject that he keeps nearly half a mile of new dirt road adjoining his farm in repair at his own expense for his satisfaction and to prove to the taxpayers how well it can be done with little expense.

To carry out his plans he set to work and constructed a double or split drag of the King style. This drag he made himself of logs and other material lying around the farm, so that really about the only thing that it cost him was a few hours of labor.

Every farmer has the material to go around his farm to build such a drag, and every farmer has enough mechanical ability to build it as it requires no special skill and matters not how rough its construction is. Then, too, all the farmers have some spare time to make the drag if they apply the time to it.

After every rain that the road gets a little uneven Mr. Nissley hitches a horse to the drag, runs it over the road as far as his lands adjoin the road, and the result is that the road along his farm is always nice and smooth when the road along his neighbors' farms is rough and full of ruts.

The Nissley plan of improving the roads will go far toward establishing a good road system. He makes no big fuss about what he is going to do or what he is doing, but goes about it in a quiet manner and does it, and the results show for themselves. The fact that the road is better along his farm than any other place in the neighborhood is evident to all those who use the road, and doubtless in the near future some of his neighbors will follow his example.

This, however, we do not think is the right way to keep public roads in repair, as they should be maintained at the expense of the public and not individually by each landowner. Doubtless Mr. Nissley's progressive movement will enthuse the supervisors of East Hempfield township to a full realization of their real duties, and doubtless in the near future the township will have a drag which will be run over all the roads of the township whenever they get rough, and then all the roads of the district will practically be smooth all the time.

One man and two horses can in two days go over all the roads in a township, and such work might be necessary about a dozen times a year. The entire cost of this will not amount to $100 a year, but will do more good than a thousand dollars a year spent on the roads with a gang of fifty or more men, with plows and scoops, going over the township once a year, as is now the plan used by most supervisors.

There are a great many different kinds of systems advanced for improving our country roads. One of the simplest and one which every individual farmer can employ today without any money and with much benefit to his road is the system of dragging the dirt road by his farm by the split log road drag. Farmers can make such a drag in a few hours by simply splitting a log in half eight feet long. If the farmer takes these split pieces, the split surface facing to the front, and fasten them with stout staves three feet apart, according to the directions given by Mr. King of Maitland, Mo., the inventor of the drag, the farmer will have a simple road implement that will make a fine smooth roadway boulevard out of the worst neglected dirt road in the community. The secret of successful roadmaking with the road drag will depend upon dragging the road after every rain, filling in the ruts, smoothing out the uneven places and building a high crown in the middle of the road, so that the water will run into the side ditches instead of standing in the middle, and, most of all, doing it. Talking does not keep a dirt road repaired. Neither does excuse finding. One hour of drag work immediately after a rain does the trick, nothing else.

GOOD SAND FOR ROADS.

Value of Waste Product From California Oil Wells.

Two hundred tons of rich black oil sand from the Sunset wells at Visalia, Cal., will be used on some of the roads of Tulare county, in California, this summer. Superintendent Twaddle, chairman of the county governing board, has been experimenting and found it satisfactory. The sand comes from the wells mixed with the oil. When this flows into the sump hole the sand sinks to the bottom and separates itself, the oil running off. Gradually the sand piles up around the derricks and at the mouth of the pipe and fills a large part of the sump. There are piles forty feet deep on the Adeline, Maricopa road, Oil and Gate City properties, which have accumulated in the course of four or five years." The sand coming with this heavy oil is different from that found with the light oils, even that with the Kern river product.

Those who have tried it say it is superior for roads to any common sand that may be mixed with oil. It has a binding quality that is lacking in artificial products. Before its adoption in Tulare county it was used quite a little on highways in the immediate vicinity of the oil fields, it being given to whoever would load and haul it away. A wide use of this byproduct by roadmakers will be a boom to the heavy oil producers of Sunset by ridding them of a nuisance and transforming it into a source of revenue.

ROAD DRAG PARADE.

Novel Movement at Sturgeon, Mo., For Good Highways.

A road drag parade half a mile in length attracted a crowd of people to Sturgeon, Mo., the other day and undoubtedly converted many who will take up the work in the future.

The parade was headed by the Sturgeon band. In carriages were the officers of the Brotherhood of Road Draggers, and then followed the drags, which were furnished by the farmers living near town. At the end of the procession an automobile owned by G. A. Pollard carried a drag, and this feature was liberally applauded along the line of march.

Sturgeon is trying to sustain her reputation of having the best dirt roads of any city in the state, and the road drag is doing the work.

Good Roads Prescription.

At a recent meeting of the highway commission and road supervisors of Baltimore county, Md., Dr. Charles L. Mattfeldt, one of the highway commissioners, wrote the following prescription for good roads:

Good stone
On good grades,
Over good base,
Dry and well packed,
Rolled and rolled,
Oiled or tarred
And properly drained,
Dustless and waterproof—
Success will follow.

It will be noticed that the letters forming the beginning of each line spell "good roads."

Coal of a cokey quality has been found by boring at a depth of 2,000 feet in the vicinity of Antwerp, in the Campine district, Belgium. As the Belgian coal district is being worked out, this discovery is said to be of the greatest importance, especially as the new field is claimed to be immense.

ONE HUNDRED WERE PRESENT

At State Teachers' Institute Held In Boyne City

SUPERINTENDENT DeVOE PRESIDENT

Next Meeting Will be Held in Charlevoix

Every Township but Norwood and the Islands Represented—Program Was Full of Helpful Suggestions

The State Teachers' Institute held in Boyne City, Friday and Saturday was certainly one of the best meetings ever held in Charlevoix county.

Over a hundred teachers attended together with half that number of students and prospective teachers. Every township in the county was represented excepting Norwood and the Islands.

After a delightful song by the eighth grade pupils, devotionals were conducted by Rev. George Rea. Hon. J. M. Harris was called away from the city on business and Supt Butler in a few well chosen words welcomed the teachers to busy Boyne.

The new school building in which the meeting was held was thoroughly inspected by the teachers and many were the exclamations of surprise and delight uttered by the teachers as they passed through the splendid rooms and spacious halls of this monument to progress erected by the people of Boyne City.

Prof. Laird, of Ypsilanti, had charge of the institute. We will not attempt to give an outline of the messages, that he delivered. He handled the various subjects on the program in a masterly way, proving himself a teacher of teachers and leaving with them many new and helpful suggestions.

Mr. Lard is an optomist, takes a cheerful view of the teacher's life, yet withall thoughtful and no teacher can listen to him for an afternoon and not feel a greater sense of responsibility. His points on reading, history, educational waste, the model lesson, the recitation and discipline were well taken and practical and not a teacher was present but will go to her school better able and more determined to do good work.

The songs given by the lower grade pupils delighted the teachers who called the little people to the platform several times.

Supt. DeVoe of Charlevoix gave the teachers some new ideas as to the mission of Phonics and I think the teachers will be likely to pay a little more attention to this very important partner of the work in reading.

Supt. Northon gave a very interesting address on Pedagogical Momentum, clearly outlining the necessity of careful and thorough work in the schools and leaving with the teachers many hints that will be helpful.

The real treat of the meeting was at the Bellamy Opera house where Dr. Thos. Green held a crowded house for two hours. Dr. Green has been styled "The Webster of the West" and all who heard his masterful oration on "The Key to the Twentieth Century," were charmed by the personality of the man and with the message he had.

Altogether the meeting was a most valuable and delightful one. Supt. I. M. DeVoe of Charlevoix was elected president of the association for the ensuing year. Mrs. Effie Stanford of East Jordan vice-president, and Miss Maddaugh, Miss Reed, Supt. Northon and Supt. Butler as a program committee.

WORKING CONGRESSMAN

Is Representative Dodds of This District

Grand Rapids Press Tells How Well He Is Serving His People

The Grand Rapids Press, through its bureau, sends the following about our congressman from this district:

Congressman Francis H. Dodds has found a job. Wherever he goes he is faced with questions like these: Shall there be a parcel post? Ought the government establish a postal savings bank? Should the rate of postage on second class mail be boosted? Are the railroads paid too much for carrying the mails?

They are questions of first importance, and Mr. Dodds has bumped into them head on through his membership on the post office committee of the house. They keep him busy. He travels from the house session to one hearing after another. There are hearings before him and hearings behind him, hearings after lunch and hearings before lunch. The perplexed publishers even want him to hear them while he is eating. So he takes second-class mail matter tablets along with his parcels post lunch, and washes it all down with postal savings bank water, while the friends and enemies of these measures constantly pour their pleas into his ears.

Dodds isn't much on talk. He just keeps his mouth closed and saws wood. He is always on hand when one of these perplexing questions is before the post office committee. Occasionally he interjects a pertinent question into a hearing. But mostly he sits back and listens with both ears open.

Dodds is bashful, too. He lives at the Dewey hotel where most of the Michigan statesmen hold forth. It is an exceedingly social place. After dinner Sunday evening the men and women all gather in the lobby and sing hymns. Dodds can sing hymns and likes too. He learned a few of them during his sojourn in Olivet college years ago when he was busy learning things to fit himself for the statesmanship. But Dodds does his singing behind a convenient pillar. With the women on the other side of the room and completely out of sight the Mount Pleasant congressman is unabashed and sings away as though he enjoyed it.

But out in the open—well, Dodds is the noiseless. When the singing is over he ducks unobstrusively through shadowy and unfrequented halls, and goes upstairs to face those eternal questions. He attends to his own affairs and is winning the regard and liking of his colleagues.

FIRE AT EAST JORDAN

Destroyed Dry Kilns at the Cooperage Plant Thursday.

The dry kilns of the East Jordan Cooperage company were destroyed by fire Thursday noon, entailing a loss of about $10,000 which is fully covered by insurance.

The kilns contained about one hundred and ten carloads of heading which were also destroyed.

Fire was discovered by workmen who were eating their dinner in the kilns, and an alarm turned in. The fire protection at the plant is good and the blaze would have been nipped in the bud but for an unfortunate bursting of the hose which delayed matters and allowed the fire to get an ungovernable headway.

Our firemen responded at once and kept the blaze from getting to the machine rooms.

The plant is owned by Grief Bros. of Cleveland, Ohio, and is under the management of O. D. Cleveland. Extensive repairs have been made and the plant was just recommencing on full days' work. Mr. Cleveland informs The Herald that steps will immediately be taken to rebuild.—East Jordan Herald.

RURAL MAIL CARRIERS

Of Antrim, Charlevoix and Kalkaska Counties

Hold Convention February 22—Will Meet at East Jordan September 8.

The fifth semi-annual convention of the rural Letter Carriers' Association of Antrim, Kalkaska and Charlevoix was held in the Blue Store hall at Ellsworth Tuesday, and was well attended. There were delegates from the three above named counties present, besides a number of visitors.

The meeting opened with the roll call, followed by the election of officers, which was interrupted by the discovery that the hall was on fire, caused by the chimney getting too hot and setting fire to the lath. Fire extinguishers from the stores of M. Strmick and W. A. Boss, soon had the blaze under control, and the meeting was again called to order. The following officers were elected:

President—Rockford Brintnall, East Jordan.

Vice-President—Earl McLain, Central Lake.

Secretary and Treasurer—Herbert Trail, Mancelona.

Delegate to State Convention—E. S. Carrol, Central Lake.

Alternate—Fred Tompkins, Mancelona.

After a picnic dinner, served by the Ellsworth Grange, the crowd assembled in front of the hall and a photograph was taken.

Upon being called to order, the meeting was addressed by Rockford Brintnall being followed by Earl McLain who gave a strong address on "The Use and Abuse of the United States Mail."

Hon. A. E. Palmer was next introduced and gave an excellent talk on the subject of "Good Roads." Mr. Palmer has been connected with road building a good many years and was in a position to answer the questions that were asked him at the meeting. It is to be hoped that some of the things he suggested will be carried out on the roads in Antrim county.

The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to those who helped make the meeting a success, also to the grange for the dinner.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Had Made Marvelous Growth in the Past Ten Years.

The Literary Digest of February 12th, 1910 gives the communicant list of the Protestant Episcopal church in the United States as 921,713 for 1909, against 540,309 in the year 1890. This is a remarkable growth in that the net gain is over 70 per cent in ten years. The average age per communicant is between 25 and 40 years. These figures do not contain the large number of baptised persons who attend the churches of this church regularly, in which case the number would be several millions.

This church has 5,516 clergy; 2,826 lay readers or men who hold services where clergy may not be had; it has 8,017 parishes and missions; there were 69,503 baptisms within the year 1909; there were solemnized 21,391 marriages in 1909; there are 50,153 Sunday school teachers and 435,495 scholars; the contributions for 1907 were $18,357,821.28.

JUDGE WILLIS BROWN

Is Not Candidate for Manager of Beulah Home

Boy City Association is on Firm Financial Footing.

An article has been published in local papers which is being generally used throughout the state, stating, on what was claimed to be authority, that Judge Willis Brown was a candidate for the position of manager of Beulah home, if the position should become vacant, the opportunity was taken advantage of by the enemies and others who were influenced by them to revamp old charges against Judge Brown and his work, which might prove detrimental to the upbuilding of Charlevoix's unique attraction, Boy City.

The COURIER is able to state on the authority of Fred Brown, manager of Boy City and Judge Brown's personal representative, that Judge Brown is not, has never been and has no intention of ever becoming a candidate for the position, although he will at all times do all in his power to advance the best interests of that institution, it is the intention of Judge Brown to devote all his energies to the upbuilding of National Boy City.

In regard to articles copied from an eastern paper, the matter was all threshed out over two years ago and the eminent men who have stood with Judge Brown in his work since is evidence that they should not be taken as conclusive.

In regard to the work in this city results speak for themselves. Last year the project was first taken up, Judge Brown asking seventy of our citizens to give notes of fifty dollars each to inaugurate the enterprise, which was done. Yesterday the full value of these notes were paid exactly as agreed upon, and with the exception of a few scattering obligations which are fast being taken care of, every promise has been kept.

The grounds are all paid for, stock is being sold and Boy City is established as one of the attractions of our city which bids fair to increase in influence for good as the years go by.

Dr. Barney has been engaged in the practise of his profession, dentistry, in this city for the past eighteen months, during which time he has gained for himself an enviable position in the social and business life of the city. Mrs. Barney was one of Charlevoix's most popular young ladies having been a life-long resident of the city.

Immediately after the ceremony Dr. and Mrs. Barney left for home, and after spending a short time in Grand Rapids arrived here Tuesday night and began housekeeping in the Bedford home on Park Avenue.

LAST GAMES OF SEASON

Will Be Pulled off Friday Evening of this Week

MANCELONA VS. CHARLEVOIX SCHOOLS

County Normal Girls vs. Charlevoix High School Girls

Charlevoix Defeated Both at Kalkaska and Boyne City—Deserve Well Crowded House.

Charlevoix high school basket ball team met its Waterloo when it brushed up against the Kalkaska high school team on the latter's floor last Friday evening. The local boys were no match for the last year's state champions who threw baskets from every conceivable angles and all the time. At times the locals would show some excellent playing but soon Kalkaska would again start their brilliant team work and the boys would be totally lost. Never before has Charlevoix played a team which handled the ball so neatly and the score of 106 to 22 shows how accurate Kalkaska were in shooting baskets.

Charlevoix went to Kalkaska to learn something of good basket ball, as they believe that the best way to learn a game is by playing teams that know how, and Charlevoix learned a good deal last Friday evening.

Saturday the girls team went to Boyne City where they played the curtain riser to the Mancelona-Boyne City boys' game. The first few minutes of the game things looked well for Charlevoix, but the older and experienced Boyne City girls began to forge ahead and the local girls were out of the game. The final score was 37 to 2. The girls are not discouraged, but feel that with the same experience that other teams have had, they can make a good showing. The girls as well as the boys lack the ability to handle the ball accurately in getting it in the basket, when under the excitement and stress of the game. This defect can only be remedied by experience and we must wait patiently.

Friday evening, March 4th, the local basket ball season closes with two games. The County Normal girls have challenged the high school girls to a return game on that date. Two weeks ago the high school girls defeated the Normal girls by a close score and the Normal girls are anxious to turn the tables if possible. The big game of the evening is the boys' game with Mancelona. For the past three years Mancelona has been noted for her basket ball teams. This year she is as strong as ever. The Charlevoix team has improved wonderfully since the Kalkaska game and will make Mancelona hustle all the way through. The local boys have had a discouraging season, playing many close games but not often winning. They deserve more credit and encouragement for playing their hardest even though almost certain of defeat than does a team which has won all its games.

Everyone come out Friday evening to help the boys win their last game. First game starts at eight o'clock.

TAKE CARE OF THE ROADS.

Government and Many States Interested in Highway Improvements.

The United States has entered upon a great era of road improvement. Large appropriations from state funds have been made for such work. At least twenty states have made such appropriations. In some states individual counties are obtaining satisfactory results by large bond issues.

The demand for men specially qualified in highway engineering is increasing at a rapid rate, and for this reason the department of agriculture in Washington has co-operated with educational institutions and urged the establishment of courses in highway engineering or a modification of civil engineering courses, so as to provide the necessary instruction. Many colleges and universities are making definite progress along these lines. In connection with this movement the department has for several years appointed annually a small number of graduates in civil engineering and given to them thorough and practical training in highway work for one year. A number of these young engineers have passed from the department's service to important situations in state and county road work.

In many parts of the country almost devoid of road building rocks the cost of macadam roads is prohibitive. Experiments have demonstrated that the sand-clay method of road construction is a fairly good substitute for macadam road, and roads so built are giving satisfaction in various southern states.

Burnt clay is another material with which experiments have been made in road construction, and it is found to be desirable to use this material where macadam roads cannot be made at a cost of not more than one-third of the usual cost of the latter.

Dust prevention on public roads has received investigation in this country as well as in Europe. The materials used in the experiments of the government department have included, among others, tar preparations, asphalt, oils, such temporary expedients as calcium chloride and several special preparations originating in the department. The testing of road materials to determine their suitability for road building has reached a high state of efficiency in the department.

Some states are rapidly giving more permanent construction to the principal highways. The state of New York in a recent year expended for this purpose more than $1,000,000; Massachusetts, about $575,000; Connecticut, about $220,000; New Jersey, about $250,000; Pennsylvania and Vermont, about $130,000 each. Among the states that have pushed this work the more rapidly are Massachusetts and Rhode Island, where about one-half of the mileage of the public roads is improved; Indiana and Ohio, with more than one-third improved; California, with about one-fifth; Connecticut, Kentucky, New Jersey and Wisconsin, with more than one-sixth, and Illinois, Maine, Maryland, Michigan, New Hampshire, New York, Tennessee and Utah, with about one-tenth.

POORLY KEPT ROAD—RAIL FENCE OVERGROWN.

A very good idea of the well kept road and the one that is neglected can be obtained by a study of the illustrations here given.

Automobiles to Haul Road Drags.

At Salina, Kan., an effort is being made to induce each automobilist to drag several miles of road after each rain. The theory is that the use of the drag places the earth on the crown of the road, where it dries and hardens. After another rain a repetition of the dragging carries on more earth, which in turn hardens, and after a few such applications of the drag there is a considerable hardened surface to the road which does not easily disintegrate. The employment of the motor car to haul the drag would demonstrate a hitherto unemployed utility of the machine.

Baking Economy

By the use of perfect baking powder the housewife can derive as much economy as from any other article used in baking and cooking. In selecting a baking powder, therefore care should be exercised to purchase one that retains its original strength and always remains the same, thus making the food sweet and wholesome, and producing sufficient leavening gas to make the baking light.

Very little of this leavening gas is produced by the cheap baking powders, making it necessary to use double the quantity ordinarily required to secure good results.

You cannot experiment every time you make a cake or biscuits, or test the strength of your baking powder to find out how much of it you should use: yet with most baking powders you should do this for they are put together so carelessly they are never uniform, the quality and strength varying with each can purchased.

Calumet Baking powder is made of chemically pure ingredients of tested strength. Experienced chemists put it up. The proportions of the different materials remain always the same. Sealed in air tight cans, Calumet Baking powder does not alter in strength and is not affected by atmospheric changes.

In using Calumet you are found to have uniform bread, cakes or biscuits, as Calumet does not contain any cheap, useless or adulterating ingredients so commonly used to increase the weight. Further, it produces pure wholesome food and is a baking powder of rare merits, therefore is recommended by leading physicians and chemists. It complies with all pure food laws, both State and National. The goods are moderate in price and any lady purchasing Calumet from her grocer, if not satisfied with it can return it and have her money refunded. 9-4-1

A Gold Road.

At Oroville, in Butte county, Cal., a section of roadway has been found so rich in placer gold that an application has been made for permission to dredge it. The miner who makes the application to the authorities agrees, according to newspaper reports, to reduce the road by one fully as good as or better than the present one. It would seem, however, that if the city owns a gold mine it would pay better to work it and get the money for the city treasury. Not many cities in the country can boast of paying gold deposits in the public streets, and there is probably a dearth of precedents to guide the city council in its action.

Chapter 17

IT became difficult for Orde to understand the home life of the Bishops. Everybody seemed a victim to the caprice of the mother, who became hysterical at the slightest provocation and was fond of contracting imaginary ills in order to gain added attention.

The day after his walk with Gerald Bishop, Orde and Carroll had arranged for a walk. But Mrs. Bishop met them at the door and demanded that her daughter stay at home to attend to several trivial matters. But the evening turned out very well fortunately. Orde could not have stood much more. They had the parlor quite to themselves. Carroll took the cover from the tall harp, and, leaning her cheek against it, she played dreamily for a half hour. Her arms were bare. Her soft bosom pressed against the broad sounding board. There is about the tones of a harp well played something luminous, like the rich, warm sunlight. When the girl muted the strings at last it seemed to Orde as though all at once the room had perceptibly darkened. He took his heave finally, his spirit soothed and restored.

Tranquillity was not for long, however. Orde's visits were naturally as frequent as possible. To them almost instantly Mrs. Bishop opposed the strong and intuitive jealousy of egotism. She had as yet no fears as to the young man's intentions, but instinctively she felt an influence that opposed her own supreme dominance.

The week passed. Orde saw as much as he could of Miss Bishop. Gerald himself seemed to be much occupied. Precisely at 11 every morning, however, he appeared at the gymnasium for his practice, and in this Orde dropped into the habit of joining him. When the young men first stripped in each other's presence they eyed each other with a secret surprise. Gerald's slender body was gracefully muscled. His bones were small, but his flesh was hard. Orde had earned from the river the torso of an ancient athlete. The round, full arch of his chest was topped by a mass of clean cut muscles. Across his back, beneath the smooth skin, the muscles rippled and ridged and dimpled with every movement. The abdomen showed the peculiar corrugation of the very strong man. His arms were magnificent.

"Murphy," called Gerald, "come here."

A very hairy, thickset, bullet headed man, the type of semiprofessional "handlers," appeared.

"Do you think you could down this fellow?" asked Gerald.

Murphy looked Orde over critically.

"Who ye ringin' in on me?" he inquired.

"This is a friend of mine," said Gerald severely. "Ever box much?" Gerald asked Orde.

"Box?" Orde laughed. "Never had time for that sort of thing. Had the gloves on a few times."

"Where did you get your training, sir?" asked the handler.

"My training," repeated Orde, puzzled. "Oh, I see; I was always pretty heavy, and I suppose the work on the river keeps a man in pretty good shape."

Gerald's langor vanished. "Put on the gloves with Murphy," he suggested, "will you? I'd like to see you two at it."

"Surely," agreed Orde good naturedly. "I'm not much good at it, but I'd just as soon try."

Gerald rang a bell, and to the boy who answered he said:

"Run over to the club and find Mr. Winslow, Mr. Clark and whoever else is in the smoking room and tell them from me to come over to the gymnasium. Tell them there's some fun on."

Gerald managed a word apart with the trainer.

"Can you do him, Murphy," he whispered.

"Sure!" said the handler. "Them kind's always as slow as dray horses."

She played dreamily for half an hour.

plunked to the floor, while Murphy had circled around him, hitting at will. Orde hit back, but without landing. Nevertheless Murphy when questioned apart did not seem satisfied.

"The man's pig iron," said he. "I punched him plenty hard enough, and it didn't seem to jar him."

The gallery at one end of the running track had by now half filled with interested spectators.

"Time!" called Gerald for round 2.

Murphy went in more viciously, aiming and measuring his blows accurately. Orde stood as before, hitting back at the elusive Murphy, but without much effect, his feet never stirring. The handler landed almost at will, but without apparent damage. He grew ugly—finally lost his head.

"Well, if ye will have it!" he muttered and aimed what was intended as a knockout blow.

Gerald uttered a half cry of warning. Orde's head snapped back; but, to the surprise of every one, the punch had no other effect, and a quick exchange of infighting sent Murphy staggering back from the encounter. The smile disappeared from Orde's face, and his eye had calmed.

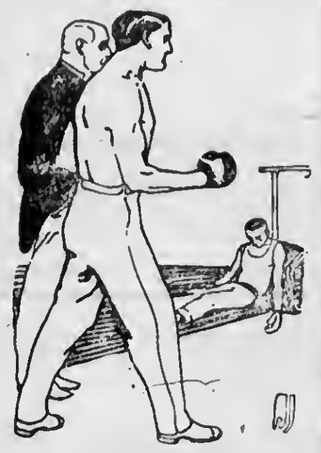
Orde turned back to his antagonist. The latter advanced once more, his bullet head sunk between his shoulders, his little eyes twinkling. Like a tiger Orde sprang forward, hitting out fiercely, first with one hand, then with the other. Murphy gave ground, blocked, ducked, exerted all a ring general's skill either to stop or avoid the rush. Orde followed him, insistent. Murphy ducked in and planted a number of short arm jabs at close range. The round ended almost immediately to a storm of applause from the galleries.

Orde sprang at his adversary in the third, repeating the headlong rush with which the previous round had ended. The young man hammered away tirelessly, insistently, delivering a hurricane of his two handed blows, pressing relentlessly in as Murphy shifted and gave ground, his head up, his eyes steady. The gallery was in an uproar. Perspiration stood out all over Murphy's body. His blows failed of their effect, and some of Orde's were landing. At length, bewildered, he closed in to straight slugging, stand up, give and take.

Orde dropped slightly his right shoulder behind his next blow. The glove crashed straight as a pile driver through Murphy's upraised hands to his face. The trainer was hurled through the air to land doubled up against the parallel bars. There he lay, quite still.

not seem conceivable to him that he could win her without a long courtship. And superadded was the almost intolerable weight of Carroll's ideas as to her domestic duties.

Nevertheless, at the very moment when he had made up his mind that it would be utterly useless even to indulge in hope for some years to come,



He lay quite still.

he spoke. It came about suddenly and entirely without premeditation.

The two had escaped for a breath of air late in the evening. Following the conventions, they merely strolled to the end of the block and back, always within sight of the house. Carroll was in a tired and pensive mood. She held her head back, breathing deeply.

"It's only a little strip, but it's the stars," said she, looking up to the sky between the houses. "They're so quiet and calm and big."

She seemed to Orde for the first time like a little girl. A wave of tenderness lifted Orde from his feet. He leaned over, his breath coming quickly.

"Carroll!" he said.

She shrank back.

"No, no! You mustn't!" she cried. She did not pretend to misunderstand.

"It's life or death with me," he said.

"I must not!" she cried, fluttering like a bird. "I promised myself long ago that I must always, always take care of mother."

"Please, please, dear," pleaded Orde. He had nothing more to say than this, just the simple incoherent symbols of pleading, but in such crises it is rather the soul than the tongue that speaks. His hand met hers and closed about it.

"Don't you care for me, dear?" asked Orde very gently.

"I have no right to tell you that," answered she. "I have tried, oh, so hard, to keep you from saying this, for I knew I had no right to hear you."

"You do care for me!" he cried.

They had mounted the steps and stood just within the vestibule.

"Carroll," cried Orde, "tell me that you love me! Tell me that you'll marry me!"

"It would kill mother if I should leave her," she said sadly.

"But you must marry me," pleaded Orde. "We are made for each other. God meant us for each other."

"It would have to be after a great many years," she said doubtfully. "Good night. Come to me tomorrow." She slipped inside the half open door.

Orde turned away and walked up the street, his eyes so blinded by the greater glory that he all but ran down an inoffensive passerby. Then as the first effervescence died a more gloomy view of the situation came uppermost. To his heated imagination the deadlock seemed complete. Carroll's devotion to what she considered her duty appeared unbreakable. And then his fighting blood surged back to his heart.

The fever of the argument coursed through his veins all that long night until daylight found him weary and fevered. By a tremendous effort he restrained himself from going over to Ninth street until the middle of the morning.

"I will marry you whenever you say."

He entered the drawing room to find her seated at the piano. His heart bounded. She did not look up until he stood almost at her shoulder. Then she turned and held out both her hands.

"It is no use, Jack," she said. "I care for you too much. I will marry you whenever you say."

Chapter 19

ORDE found a note at the hotel the next day asking him to be in Washington square at half past 2. Carroll met him with a bright smile.

"Things aren't quite right at home," she said. "It is a great shock to poor mother at first, and she feels very strongly. Oh, it isn't you, dear; it's the notion that I can care for anybody but her. You see, she's been used to the other idea so long that I suppose it seemed a part of the universe to her. She'll get used to it after a little, but it takes time."

Orde examined her face anxiously. Two bright red spots burned on her cheeks; her eyes flashed with a nervous animation.

She smiled up at him.

"We have to pay for the good things in life, don't we, dear? And they are worth it. We must not be too impatient. Now, let's enjoy the day."

At 5 o'clock Orde took her back to her doorstep.

This went on several days.

Orde saw that the strain was beginning to tell. Carroll's worried expression grew from day to day.

From Gerald at his club Orde sought more intimate news of what was going on.

Little by little Orde's eager questions drew out the truth of the situation. Mrs. Bishop had shut herself up in a blind and incredible obstinacy, whence she sallied with floods of complaints, tears, accusations, despairs, reproaches, vows, hysterics—all the battery of the woman misunderstood. If Carroll undertook to say anything the third word would start her mother off into one of her long and hysterical tirades. Her child had disobeyed her. And as a climax she had assumed the impregnable position of a complete prostration, wherein she demanded the minute care of an invalid in the crisis of a disorder. The mere mention of the subject nearest Carroll's heart brought the feeble complaint

COUNTY NORMAL

The sad news has been received of the death of Miss Susie Sheldon of East Jordan, February 25. Miss Sheldon was a member of last year's class and was very greatly loved by her class mates and by the many friends she made while in Charlevoix.

The County Normal class accompanied by Miss Reed drove to Boyne City last week to attend the institute. Miss Himes was suffering with a severe cold and was not able to go.

Emma Rasmusson and Arhuths Nordrum went to Petoskey Thursday night on their way to Boyne City. They stayed with friends until Friday and then joined the class at the institute, returning with them on Saturday.

The class have been designing patterns in carpet to show waste in matching in laying carpet. Some of the designs are very attractive.

Isabel Knight and Margaret Watson each taught in the north ward one day last week. They had charge of the primary room in the place of Miss Jarvis, who was ill.

THE SHETLAND FOR PROFIT.

It Is Easy to Raise and Commands the Highest Prices.

Most of us know that in almost every line of work the man who can supply a special demand gets the special price. This applies to live stock breeding as well as to anything else, for the man who wants something above the common run of stock is always willing to pay the price for it. The man who can produce a high stepping coach horse is able to pile up the dollars. The main difference between the pony man and the man with the coachers is that almost every one can raise a pony, while it takes a true horseman to turn out a high stepper. Both cater to the high class trade.

A CHAMPION SHETLAND PONY.

There are very few animals which can be raised on the farm with greater ease than the Shetland, and there are fewer ones which have such a high selling price with so low a cost of production. Most pony raisers figure on keeping a pony about as easily and as expensively as they keep a sheep. A mature mare can be kept on clover hay alone during an entire winter, though the ration is often changed to cheaper roughage in connection with a little grain. Many are kept by outsiders for $12 a year on the basis of 50 cents per month in summer and $1.50 in winter. At such low rates feeders must make money or they would not keep them.

The favorite method of feeding the colts seems to be to put them in a shed where there are mangers and a long trough. There they are fed a pint of a mixture of ground corn and oats three times a day. A little shredded corn fodder is given with the hay for a change.

After eighteen months they are not colts, but ponies. It does not take them long to get their growth. As a rule, they are easily broken at twelve months of age. Well broken ponies are in great demand. Well bred ponies sell at an average price of $180. Colts just weaned sell at about $50. Counting the service fee and the full cost of keeping the mare a year, these prices will give the breeder a profit of from $20 to $25 on a weanling. There is more profit in keeping them until maturity. Yearlings sell at from $85 to $110, fillies at from $120 to $200, while first class stallions sell as high as $1,000.

Sheltering Heifers and Colts.

The heifers and colts need shelter when the nights are cold and frosty. A drizzling rain or a light snow will often cause serious trouble, and the exposure of a single cold night may start them to coughing.

When there is plenty of feed they should be brought from the pasture at the first indications of cold weather. On bitter cold days such animals should be kept in all day. The change to the winter ration should be gradually made.

Young stock away from any restraining influences will often become wild or shy. Keep them in a herd and handle quietly and carefully. Allow no dogs around when driving them. Such care will soon wear off the shyness.

THE SHEPHERD

The greatest profit in feeding sheep for mutton is gained while the animals are still young.

Fattening Lambs.

Corn and clover hay or corn and clover pasture is the best feed to put fat on lambs rapidly. Water and salt are also essential.

Care of Lambs.

A lamb, once allowed to get poor, will not make money for either the grower or feeder. The thrifty lamb is the money maker. A scattering, uneven fleece is indicative of either poor health or very poor care.

The Wool Growth.

A good even growth of wool requires uniform feeding throughout the year, says Wool Markets and Sheep. A short period of deprivation causes a weak streak all through the fleece, and buyers are always on the lookout for defects that will reduce the prices.

Cull the Flock.

Concerning culls, there should be none, says American Agriculturist. A good shepherd dislikes to turn off a ewe as long as she bears a fair fleece and raises a lamb or two. But watch the mouth. A sheep with scattering or loose teeth is past her prime. Sell her at the first sign of decadence, and she will fatten all right.

Look Out For Worms.

Some flockmasters make it a rule to feed a little worm powder occasionally whether the sheep show symptoms of worms or not. It is a good plan and should be more generally practiced. One cannot be too sure that his flock is not troubled with worms, and the result of the use of a little good worm powder may surprise him.—Wool Markets and Sheep.

HER HOBBY.

It Led Her to Make Trouble, but She Rectified It.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Is there any one who has no hobby? Well, if there is it is questionable if such person is happy. We live lives—at least most of us do—that lie in beaten tracks.

The merchant that has built up a large business goes to his store every day to do pretty much the same thing. His wife stays at home, looks after the servants and makes calls. The doctor visits the sick and listens to an eternal round of aches and pains.

The clergyman preaches every Sunday and makes parochial visits. With all of us our occupation sooner or later becomes humdrum.

What, then, is our relief, our safety valve?

A hobby.

Hobbies are sometimes mere whims, or they may be a fancy that a certain line of action under certain circumstances is essential. Of such kind was Nell Lambert's.

Her hobby was self control. She was accustomed to say that it was the only cultured substitute for contentment and that the result of its perfect attainment was perpetual youth. The quick growth of a frown habit and the wrinkles that follow in its wake were among her strongest arguments.

Nell was wooed and won by John Brent. She was very happy, and apparently John was happy too. The world seemed suddenly transformed from a very humdrum affair to a paradise. She managed to retain her self control, so far as telling any of her friends of her engagement was concerned. Then there was a lapse. Her friend Pattie Roane called, and Nell let out the secret.

Not long after Miss Roane's departure Pattie was standing at the parlor window which overlooked the street admiring some flowers that were kept in the window. She was thinking of her lover, and it seemed that the flowers looked up at her with a happy smile. Happening to glance up, her heart seemed to cease to beat.

There, driving down the street on his dogcart, with Miss Roane beside him, was John Brent. Nevertheless her habit of self control was strong enough to enable her to give the couple a gracious nod and a smile.

What did it mean? Had she not been in that tremulous condition, love, when every shadow is a demon? She would probably have thought that there was no meaning to it whatever. As it was, she considered it in the light of an insult from both John and Pattie.

That evening John called. She received him graciously and chatted with him as if nothing had happened, but before he left told him that their engagement was a thing of the past. All this required great self control, but that self control she possessed.

The three weeks that followed found her still living up to the hobby. If she was a bit whiter and thinner the spirituelle effect was becoming, therefore welcome. There could be a tonic and a change of air should the scrawny stage threaten. Pending that time her maid one morning announced, "Miss Roane."

"Lower the shades a trifle, Lisette," said Nell and glanced into her mirror. "Draw that stand of lilacs nearer, so Miss Roane may come up."

"How sensible you always are!" said Pattie, making at once for an easy chair. "Here have I for three weeks been afflicted with a conscience, and you—you look as if you never had one."

"Three weeks?" smiling. "It is a long time to carry anything heavy."

"Well," with a look half meek, half mischievous, "I have brought the burden to you."

"To me? I thought a conscience was like a railroad pass—always labeled 'not transferable.'"

"I only want it doctored."

"But that is a very trite idea, is it not?"

"What I mean is not trite," said Pattie. She took a cluster of white lilacs from the stand and gently brushed her face with them. Keen eye shots could piece such a hedge undetected. "Trite exploits are either easy or necessary."

"If you mean it is hard to do anything original"—

"That I do not. I mean this is original because too hard to be often undertaken."

"Yet it is only a little conscience to be doctored."

"There are things to tell you," gravely, "because we are friends."

"Present tense?"

"Yes," lowering the hedge to give a steady look.

"Very well," with a smile that held some sarcasm lurking beneath it; "tell on."

"That day after you told me of your engagement to John Brent I saw his dogcart before Ransom's, and I happened in, don't you know, and said something about such a royal day for driving and smiled up at him my very best smile. It was a bit of mischief. I knew you would be riled over the matter and wake his resentment."

"'Behold how great a fire a little spark kindleth,'" said crumpled Nell.

"I asked him to drive this way, and he laughed. We meant only to tease you a little—nothing serious."

"No?"

"Not then," bending her face into the lilacs.

"Well," coldly, "he is now free."

An eye shot passed over the hedge.

"Knowing how that drive came about, you are still too proud to recall him?"

Nell settled herself more coolly among the cushions of her divan and gave her prettiest low laugh. "'Is thy servant a dog?'" she said.

"But he would come," said Pattie gently.

"There is a better way to come."

"And if he does not choose it?"

"I am content," sang Nell sweetly.

"Then if he's free," said Pattie, well behind the flower hedge, "I ought to let you understand," hesitatingly, "that—that"—

"Oh, certainly," said Nell mockingly, "each one for herself."

"I should not have put it in just that way," Pattie went on, with a half nervous little laugh, "but I shall not avoid him or be at my worst with him."

"It is a woman's business," dryly, "to charm, especially to charm one man."

"If he is the right one," faltered Pattie Roane.

"True. Yet the wrong one is often entertaining and easier."

"And you do not care?" asked Pattie as she took up and put the flowers back in the vase. "But you'll believe, won't you, that I meant no wrong, that I did not know what would come?"

"You have not finished your story," said Nell, with sudden sharpness. "What has come to him—what has come?"

"If you would be sorry, I think," very low, "that he would be happy."

"Otherwise—in time?" breathlessly.

"Perhaps he may think of me," said Pattie and turned away her face.

She was going silently to the door when Nell, white as her lilacs, came to the lintel.

"You have been honest," she said chokingly, "so I will tell you. I cannot bear it," with a sob, "I cannot!"

Pattie flushed. "Do you want me to go away out of his reach?" she asked with voice that trembled and with lowered eyes.

"No, but I will write and ask him"—alas for the hobby, tears came—"ask him to forgive me."

"I will wait and post the letter." Pattie slowly and went back to her chair.

"He may be angry still, you know," Nell said wistfully when the note was written and her guest on the stair, but there was no answer.

Pattie hurried out to the corner mail box and, having dropped the note inside, came around the turn of the street face to face with John Brent.

"I have been attending to some of your business," she said, with a happy laugh.

"Think you. It could not be in better hands, I am sure," said John.

"I think so myself," radiantly. "Could you pick a lock of a corner post box?"

"Well, not without some training, I think."

"Then the best thing for you to do is to go on to Nell's. Say the proper thing, you know," rapidly. "Say that you are a wreck from misery and cannot bear it any longer."

"But"—

"That handsome Englishman has been sending more flowers, exquisite white lilacs. If I were you they should go out of a back window."

"But"—

"She will be delighted that you came before the note reached you, but do not hint that you know about it."

"About what?"

"The note, the note, the note!"

"Pick a corner post box," said John dazedly, but with a slight dawning in his eye. "Nell has written me a note?"

"Oh, the slowness of a man's mind!" cried Pattie. "Are you going to stand here after all my brilliant plot while that girl sobs herself ill—ill waiting to know if you forgive her?"

John's answer was in the rapidity of his stride around the corner, and Pattie, the plotter, her face dimpling with smiles and ease of conscience, went far enough to peep and see him run up Nell's steps three at a time.

"Good!" she murmured, with a little chuckle. But it must be admitted that she deserved one.

That was Nell's last effort at controlling her feelings when she felt aggrieved. She had learned that standing out as if the right was all hers without giving the other side a hearing was not self control, but injustice. And Pattie Roane, whose mischievous disposition was always getting her into scrapes which her genial disposition usually got her out of, learned that her propensity for such larks should be curbed by a proper self control.

Keep Busy.

Shun idleness. It is the rust that attaches itself to the most brilliant metals.—Voltaire.

Neighborhood Notes

From Newaygo county comes a most remarkable statement as to the change in conditions in that county during 1909 as compared with 1908. It is stated that the cost of the sheriff's office in that county for the year 1909 was $1,586.30, a reduction of $1,500 as compared with the expenses of the year before. And not only is that statement made relative to the better conditions in Newago county in the matter of criminal trials and jail expenses but it is further said to be true that during the past year there has been but one conviction in Newaygo county on a criminal charge while during the year 1908 ten convictions are noted on the official records. It may not be true that this result in Newaygo county or even the larger part of it is due to the fact that in 1908 the saloons of Newaygo county were all open and doing an active business, while during eight months of the year 1909 there was not an open saloon in the county. It will probably not be claimed by the most energetic opponent of local option that the absence of the saloons had nothing to do with this remarkable improvement of affairs in Newaygo county, but friends of local option will be quite willing to call attention to the very happy coincidence and permit the facts in the case to point their own lesson and to preach their own sermon.—News and Express.

Attorney-General Bird will now make application for the appointment of a receiver. The sanitarium is valued at more than $1,000,000.

It pays to care for orchards. Nobody is likely to dispute this statement. Just how great the profits are is an open question. Ben Barnes, a Grand Traverse, Western Michigan, fruit grower offers his testimony which is as follows: Four years ago, 312 trees in his apple orchard produced 30 barrels of fruit. Three years ago these same trees produced 480 barrels and this year the trees gave forth 1,123 barrels and each barrel sold for $2.50, a total of $2,807.50. During the four years the trees have been given special attention as regards fertilization, cultivation and spraying. They were sprayed once during the season of 1909, four pounds of arsenate of lead being used to fifty gallons of water. The trees are 38 years old and are of the following varieties: King, Golden Russet, Rhode Island Greening and Northern Spy.

The new Odd Fellows hall in the second floor of the Wisler building on the east side of the railroad, was dedicated with impressive ceremonies, on Monday evening. Postmaster Newville of Boyne City, officiated as master of ceremonies, representing the grand master of the state grand lodge, and Rev. Reed of the same city represented the grand chaplain.

The only grand lodge officer in attendance was H. N. Wilder of Lansing, grand secretary, and he also assisted in the work of dedication. Following the ceremonies speeches were made by all the visitors also by Jessie Wisler and George Dunham of this village. A grand banquet was served to all the members of the order in attendance and to a number of invited guests.—Manceloua Herald.

A good sized crowd attended the village caucus last evening in the Kearney opera hall, and with one exception the entire ticket was elected on the first ballot. The case where the two ballots were cast was for the office of president, and this would not have been necessary if there had not been a previous motion not to make any informal ballot formal.

Following is a list of the nominees: President, H. M. Caldero, trustees, Job England, Wm. Robinson and Chas. S. Gutle; clerk, C. W. Putt; treasurer, W. H. Richards; assessor, H. H. Flanagin, Job England and Charles S. Gutle were nominated to succeed themselves as council men, as also was C. W. Putt nominated to succeed himself as clerk, having held that position for the past eight terms. As there probably will be no other ticket in the field, the above named persons will undoubtedly be our village officers for the ensuing year.—Bellaire Independent.

Tipping a Lord.

A day or two ago I gave a story about the late Lord Tweedmouth, who once received half a crown as a "tip" from an American lady whom he had shown over the houses of parliament. "Curiously enough," writes one of your readers, "I have just happened on the following in Hawthorne's 'Our Old Home,' which occurs in the chapter describing his visit to Shakespeare's birthplace.

"'In fact, nobody need fear to hold out half a crown to any person with whom he has occasion to "speak a word in England.'

"Possibly the American lady who tipped Lord Tweedmouth may have read the above sentence and taken it seriously."—London News.

Her Greatest Compliment.

The woman was walking along Fifteenth street when a small girl child stopped her.

"Say," smiled the small girl child, "have you got a little sister?"

"No," said the woman. "Why?"

"Oh, I wish you had a little sister," sighed the small girl child, "so I could play with her!"

"I'm awfully sorry," apologized the woman. "I never felt like I ought to have had a little sister till now. I'm awfully sorry."

Then she went on, looking back every little while at the child who had paid her what she felt to be the most sincere compliment she ever had received.—New York Press.

"Do you want to kill me?"

The only scrap of victory to be snatched from this stricken field was the fact that Carroll insisted on going to meet her lover every afternoon. Though he fretted under the tyranny, Orde could see nothing which could relieve the situation save his own withdrawal. He had already long overstayed his visit. Important affairs connected with his work demanded his attention. He had the comfort of Carroll's love assured.

The morning after he had reached this conclusion he again met Gerald at the gymnasium.

"Orde," said Gerald suddenly, "I'm worried about Carroll. Mother has commenced bothering her again. It wasn't so bad as long as she stuck to daytime, but now she's taken to prowling in a dozen times a night. I hear their voices for an hour or so at a time. I'm afraid it's beginning to wear on Carroll more than you realize."

"Thank you," said Orde briefly and departed.

At his hotel Orde found a telegram. He did not open it until he had reached his own room. It was from home, urging his immediate return for the acceptance of some contracted work.

"To h— with the contracted work!" he muttered savagely and, calling a bellboy, sent an answer very much to that effect.

He was interrupted by a knock on the door.

"Come in!" he called without turning his head.

He heard the door open—and shut. After a moment he looked around. Kendrick Bishop stood watching him.

Orde looked at him curiously and saw that he was suffering from an intense excitement. His frame trembled convulsively; his lips were white; his face went red and pale by turns.

"You've got to let my mother alone," he managed to say finally. "You've brought her to the point of death. You're hounding her to her grave."

Orde thought to catch the echo of quotation in these words.

He burst from the room.

"What do you want me to do?" asked Orde after a moment of thought.

"Go away," cried Kendrick.

"I cannot do that."

Kendrick's face assumed a livid pallor, and his eyes seemed to turn black with excitement. Trembling in every limb, but without hesitation, he advanced on Orde, drew a short riding whip from beneath his coat and slashed the young man across the face. Orde looked steadily at the boy. Once again Kendrick hit, raised his arm for the third time, hesitated. His lips writhed, and then, with a sob, he cast the little whip from him and burst from the room.

"Poor youngster," Orde murmured.

The next day Carroll came to him with hurried, nervous steps, her usually pale cheeks mounting danger signals of flaming red, her eyes swimming.

Orde did not attempt as yet to draw from her the cause of this unusual agitation. A park bench stood between two dense bushes, screened from all directions save one. To this he led her.

"This thing has got to quit," said he grimly.

A carriage rolled near and discharged its single passenger on the pavement.

"It's Gerald!" cried Carroll.

The young man, catching sight of them, picked his way daintily and leisurely toward them.

"I have brought," said he, "a carriage, and I wish you would both do me the favor to accompany me on a short excursion."

The three—Carroll and Orde somewhat bewildered—took their seats. After an interval the carriage drew up opposite a brownstone dwelling. The three were ushered by a discreet and elderly maid into a little square reception room.

"I have brought you here, among other purposes, to hear from me a little brief wisdom drawn from experience and the observation of life," Gerald began, addressing his expectant and curious guests. "That wisdom is briefly this: There comes a time in the affairs of every household when a man must assert himself as the ruler. In all the details he may depend on the woman's judgment, experience and knowledge, but when it comes to the big crises, where life is deflected into one channel or the other, then, unless the man does the deciding, he is lost forever and his happiness and the happiness of those who depend on him. This is abstruse, but I come to the particular application shortly."

"This may be all very true, Gerald," said Orde, "but I fail to see why you have brought us to this strange house to tell it."

"In a moment," replied Gerald. "Have patience. Believing that thoroughly, I have come in the last twenty-four hours to a decision."

He produced a paper and a package from his inside pocket.

"I have here," he went on suddenly, "marriage papers duly made out. In this package is a plain gold ring. In the next room is waiting by prearrangement a very good friend of mine in the clergy. Personally I am at your disposal."

He looked at them expectantly.

"The very thing!"

"Oh, no!" cried Orde and Carroll in unison.

Ten minutes later the three passed through the door into the back apartment.

They found waiting a young clergyman with two young girls. At the sight of Carroll these latter rushed forward and overwhelmed her with endearments.

In fifteen minutes the little party separated amid a chatter of congratulations. Mr. and Mrs. Orde drove away.

Chapter 20

"My sweetheart," said Orde.

"Poor mother! I wonder how she'll take it."

In the hallway of the Bishop house Orde kissed her.

"Be brave, sweetheart," said he, "but remember that now you're my wife."

Orde sat in the dim parlor for what seemed to be an interminable period. Occasionally the sounds of distant voices rose to his ear and died away again. Finally he heard the rustle of the portieres and turned to see the dim form of the general.

"Bad business! Bad business!" muttered the old man. "It's very hard on me. Perhaps you did the right thing. You must be good to her, but I cannot countenance this affair. It was most high handed, sir!"

Finally, after another interval, Carroll returned. She was sobbing violently. She came to him and for the moment hid her face against his breast. After a little she controlled herself.

"Jack, we must go tonight. She—she has ordered me out of the house and says she never wants to see my face again." She broke down for a second. "Oh, Jack, she can't mean that! And she's very bitter against Gerald. Oh, I told her it wasn't his fault, but she won't listen. She sent for that odious Mr. Merritt—her rector, you know—and he supported her. I believe he's angry because we did not go to him."

"Can't you just pack a bag and leave the rest until tomorrow? It's about hungry time."

"She says I must take every stitch belonging to me tonight."

They packed trunks until late that night. Carroll and Orde walked together to the hotel. Next morning an interview with Gerald confirmed them in their resolution of immediate departure.

"She is set in her opposition now, and at present she believes firmly that her influence will separate you."

Gerald smiled his fine smile.

"Goodby," said he. "Going to a train is useless and a bore to everybody."

Carroll threw herself on his neck in an excess of passionate weeping.

At the station the general appeared.

"There, there!" he fussed. "If your mother should hear of my being here

"And write your daddy, Carroll."

it would be a very bad business. And you, sir, be good to her. And write your daddy, Carroll. He'll be lonesome for you." He blew his nose very loudly. "Here, my dear, open this envelope when you are well started. It may help cheer the journey."

He hurried them through the gate.

Carroll opened the envelope. It contained a check for $1,000.

"Dear old daddy!" she murmured. "Our only wedding present!"

Chapter 21

THE winter months were spent at Monrovia, where Orde and his wife lived for a time at the hotel.

Carroll soon became acquainted with the life of the place. Monrovia consisted of an upper stratum of mill owners and lumber operators, possessed of considerable wealth and some culture; a gawky middle estate of storekeepers and the lumber mill operatives. The class first mentioned comprised a small coterie, among whom Carroll soon found two or three congenials—Edith Fuller, wife of the bank cashier; Valerie Cathcart, whose husband had been killed in the civil war; Clara Taylor, wife of the leading lawyer of the village, and, strangely enough, Mina Heinzman, the sixteen-year-old daughter of old Heinzman, the lumberman. Though later the old German and Orde locked in serious struggle on the river, they continued to meet socially quite as usual, and the daughter of one and the wife of the other never suspected anything out of the ordinary.

Newmark received the news of his partner's marriage without surprise, but with a sardonic gleam in his eye. He called promptly, conversed politely for a half hour and then took his leave.

"How do you like him?" asked Orde.

"He's a very shrewd man."

Orde laughed.

"I don't dislike him," said Carroll. "I've not a thing against him. But we could never be in the slightest degree sympathetic. He and I don't—don't"—

"Don't jibe," Orde finished for her. "I didn't think you would. Joe's not much of a society dog."

Newmark had rented a small one story house situated just off Main street. Into this he retired as a snail into its shell. At first he took his meals at the hotel, but later he imported an impassive, secretive manservant, who took charge of him completely. Neither master nor man made any friends. Carroll and Orde, out for a walk, passed this quaint little place.

"Goodby," she said.

"Jack," she begged, "I want a little house like that for our very own."

"We can't afford it, sweetheart."

"Not to own," she explained, "just to rent. It will be next best to having a home of our own."

"We'd have to have a girl, dear," said Orde, "and we can't even afford that yet."

"A girl!" she cried indignantly.

"You couldn't do the housework and the cooking," said Orde. "You've never done such a thing in your life, and I won't have my little girl slaving."

"It won't be slaving; it will be fun, just like playing housekeeping," protested Carroll. "And I've got to learn some time. I was brought up most absurdly, and I realize it now."

"We'll see," said Orde vaguely.

Later Carroll brought the subject up again, armed with sheets of paper covered with figures showing how much cheaper it would be to keep house than to board.

"You certainly make out a strong case—on paper," laughed Orde. "If you buy a rooster and a hen and she raises two broods, at the end of a year you'll have twenty-six, and if they all breed, even allowing half roosters, you'll have over 300, and if they all breed you'll have about 3,500, and if"—

"Stop, stop!" cried Carroll, covering her ears.

"All right," agreed Orde equably, "but that's the way it figures. Funny the earth isn't overrun with chickens, isn't it?"

Two days later Orde took her one block up the street to look at a tiny little house tucked on a fifty foot lot beneath the shadow of the church.

"It's mighty little," said he. "I'll have to go out in the hall to change my collar."

They ended by renting the little house, and Carroll took charge of it delightedly. What difficulties she overcame and what laughable and cryable mistakes she made only those who have encountered a like situation could realize.

"Kind of fun being married, isn't it?" said he.

"Kind of," she admitted, nodding gravely.

The business of the firm was now in shape. Room arrangements had been made, the rugs were in the water, supplies and equipments were stored away, the foremen of the crews engaged and the crews themselves pretty well picked out. Almost before they knew it January and February had flown.

"We must pack up, sweetheart," said Orde.

"It's only yesterday that we came," she cried regretfully.

At Redding they explored together for three days the delights of the old fashioned house. Then Orde assumed his woods clothes and marched off down the street, carrying his bag on his back.

"He looks like a conqueror of wildernesses," cried Carroll, straining her eyes after his vanishing figure. Suddenly she darted after him. She clasped him by the shoulders.

"Goodby," she said. "You'll take better care of my sweetheart than you ever did of Jack Orde, won't you, dear?"

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson grange met in regular session Saturday with an attendance of twenty members.

Worthy Master George Todd called the meeting to order and found all the officers present except overseer.

After the usual order of business the lecturer's hour was taken up with songs, readings and recitations also a discussion as to what each member enjoyed most in the grange.

The general opinion was that the lecturer's hour was enjoyed most with the exception of one of the young brothers, who said he enjoyed the girls most.

Grange closed in form after which the degree was practiced in the third and fourth degrees.

How Tuberculosis Spreads

Just for instance: A young man who had been clerking for years in the basement of a huge department store, developed a cough! And he was tired, so tired that his sister suggested that he take a vacation in midwinter. She was a dressmaker, making good money, and she thought he needed a little rest.

So he got leave of absence and changed from the unventilated basement of the store to the overheated and equally unventilated flat. To be sure, he took an occasional walk, but most of the time he sat in the back parlor reading, and when this occupation palled, he went into the work room and chatted with the women sewing on pretty frocks for a score of customers. And wherever he went he expectorated. There was a spittoon, a dry spittoon, in every room!

But he got no better, the rough sputum did not cure and finally he went to see a doctor. The doctor sent a sample of this young man's sputum to the laboratory conducted by the board of health and had it examined. When the young man called again he was told that he had consumption. The board of health was notified of the fact by the physician in charge of the case. The young man was sent to a sanatorium for incipient cases, the house was fumigated and the dressmaker mainstay of the family though she was—heard some plain truths about slipping out frocks from this germ laden home and employing a dozen workers in one room without proper ventilation. That one case of tuberculosis could infect the families of the dozen sewers and the two dozen customers. It could spread out its death dealing tentacles and touch at least one hundred and fifty unsuspecting persons.—From Woman's Home Companion for March.

THEATRICAL

Monday night, March 7, 1910, there will be an entertainment given at Norwood town hall, consisting of moving pictures, personal plays and after twelve o'clock dancing will begin. All are invited to bring your friends. Proprietors, Oscar VanDusen and H. A. Portman. Admission, adults 25c, children 15c.

Those who live to laugh, look forward with pleasure to the coming of the "Toymakers" who open in the Charlevoix theater on Thursday evening, March 3, for one night only, in their new musical absurdity called "The Toymakers" which is the great success of the season. A good company of clever people who know how to sing, act and dance, can amuse an audience always, but when the play is bubbling over with fun and wit and sweet music a rare treat follows and Charles E. Pidgin knows how to do this down to the ground. We all remember the fun in "Quincy Adams Sawyer," which was read more than any other book ever put out in this country, and Mr. Pidgin, happens to be Chief of the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics, has lived up to his great reputation and "some more" this time. Of all places, a toyshop might be said to contain the largest chance for fun.

An old toymaker in "Merrie, England," invents a wonderfull doll and when she comes to life sets the whole village in a wild uproar as some "real ladies" have done in old England before. She just sets the house into a ripple of uproarious laughter that only calms when the curtain falls on the last act of this extremely clever musical comedy. The lyrics, twenty-six in all, were written by the author of the book and set to its sparkling music by the celebrated composers, Chas. D. Blake and John A. Bennett, who knew how to write bright, catchy tunes that catch the popular fancy. Tickets on sale at Chapel's.

FAREWELL PARTIES

Given in Honor of Two Charlevoix Ladies Last Week.

A very pleasant farewell surprise party was given Mrs. Dan Durance, Monday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Ashdon of which forty friends and neighbors gathered and spent a very pleasant evening. Refreshments were served and a social time is reported. Mrs. Durance and children move this week to Boyne City.

Mrs. Clarence LaPeer, assisted by Mrs. Hamilton and Mrs. White, entertained at the former's home on Saturday p. m., on Park Avenue, twenty-five of the Lady Maccabees, in honor of Mrs. Will Holmes, who leaves for her new home at Port Huron, Thursday. At six o'clock a bountiful supper was served and at the close of the repast, the commander Mrs. Sweet, with a few appropriate remarks presented Mrs. Holmes with a beautiful berry set as a token of the high esteem which Mrs. Holmes holds in the lodge.

Tuesday evening Mrs. Bert Brown entertained the ladies of the Baptist church at a pot luck in honor of Mrs. Holmes.

C. H. S. NOTES.

Thirty teachers and county Normal students of Charlevoix, with the support of fur coats borrowed from generous citizens of the city, braved the rigorous zero weather of Friday morning, driving to Boyne City to attend the annual association institute of the Charlevoix county teachers.

An interesting program was carried out with Prof. S. B Laird of Ypsilanti as the main spoke in the wheel. Many helpful suggestions and a great deal of inspiration were taken away from the meeting by the Charlevoix county teachers, every one voting it the best association ever held in Charlevoix county.

The music for the occasion was furnished by the high school chorus, eighth and second grade pupils of the Boyne City schools under the direction of Miss Jessie McIntosh, supervisor of music and drawing in the Boyne City schools. The little second grade pupils in their Japanese song pleased the audience immensly and were called back for an encore.

The teachers and citizens of Boyne City were given a treat in the lecture of Dr. Thomas Green Friday evening on the subject "The Key to the Twentieth Century."

At the business meeting Saturday morning, Supt. I. M. DeVoe of Charlevoix was elected president of the association for the coming year and Charlevoix was designated as the next meeting place.

How to Take Care of a Piano.

Temperature is one of the most important points to be considered in keeping a piano in good condition. Extreme heat or cold, or drafts are as fatal to the health of the piano as to that of a human being, therefore it should never be placed too near a fire or a window. The best place to choose is a part of the room which is out of a draft and where a fairly even temperature is maintained. The piano should always be kept closed, to prevent dust from entering, and even then it ought to be covered up while the room is being swept. To clean the case never use furniture polish. A wash leather wrung out in warm water is the best thing. The keys should never be washed, as that discolors the ivory. If they are stained rub the stains out with a little lemon juice and salt. It spoils the keys to lift them up when dusting.

How to Protect Hardwood Floors.

When the sewing machine casters are of metal they will make a mark on matting and sometimes on hardwood floors, but this may easily be obviated by making small bags of cotton flannel, a dark color is less noticeable which can be sewed over the casters, leaving room enough for them to roll easily and still protect the matting from the usual unsightly marks. The bags should be neatly made and caught firmly to the legs of the machine.

How to Make an Excellent Liniment.

A liniment that is excellent to keep on hand for sprains, bruises and colds can be easily made at home. Mix two ounces each of chloroform, ammonia, spirits of camphor and sweet oil. Shake it well and bottle, corking tightly. After rubbing the liniment well into the skin wrap the affected parts with flannel.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

In sentencing Proprietor Johnson of the Holly Inn at Pontiac, the court handed Mr. Johnson in the way of a Washington's birthday package, 65 days in the Detroit work house, $100 fine and $61.70, amount of the costs. Just prior to announcing Johnson's sentence, Judge Smith said:

"The local option law permits every person to purchase and use in his own home any kind or amount of intoxicating liquors. As construed by the supreme court, it also allows one to give it as an act of hospitality to those who are in good faith his guests. The personal liberty of the user of liquor is not therefore greatly abridged."

"Its aim is to supress drinking in public places known as saloons. The reasons for this distinction between the home and the saloon are numerous and plain."

"The saloon is organized to make money for the proprietor and to furnish a market for the manufacturer of liquors. Competition induces many devices to increase the sales in them. All of them encourage treating. Many of them tolerate gambling. The slot machine is often found there. Most of them encourage drinking by young men that they may have customers in the future. Quite a percentage of them permit the stealing of an intoxicated man's money, upon the theory that if he does not lose his money in A's place he will in B's. There were several such instances in the local courts and other sufferers from this form of outrage who were ashamed or afraid to prosecute. The natural tendency in a saloon is toward the excessive use of intoxicants. Their owners combine to secretly control the election of sheriffs and prosecuting attorneys and sometimes of the judges for the purpose of securing immunity for the violation of the law. They reward candidates for other offices who spend money freely in treating voters. I could name several officers here who went out of office as poor in purse as when nominated because of the necessity of constantly spending money over the bar in treating."

"The use of liquor in the home has vastly different surroundings and results. Unless a man's appetite is already beyond his control from long use of intoxicants, he is not likely to use them to excess in the presence of his family, his guests or in privacy of his place of business."

"Mr. Johnson, I regret the necessity of imposing a penalty, because you have been a personal friend and belong to a fine family. In a hotel with large operating expenses the temptation to violate the law is great. But you went into the hotel business because you wished to operate a bar. You were a persistant violator of the former tax law. Your bar became obnoxious to a large majority of the people of Holly. I am told it helped to swell the local option sentiment there. My belief is that you have violated the present law more times than are disclosed by the witnesses in the present case. You appear to belong to a class of dealers who believe the sale of liquors should be as free as the sale of groceries and dry goods, and who will not obey any liquor law except from fear of punishment."

"In my opinion it would be wise for you either to go out of the hotel business or else strictly obey the law. For the present indications are that the people of this county are not going back to the old conditions by the repeal of the present law in April next, nor elect any candidate for prosecuting attorney or sheriff who will conceal violations or grant immunity from arrest. Even, the new Warner-Crampton law is but a rope of sand when there are no officials who will enforce it."

"But, should the law be repealed at the coming election the contrast between the conditions that will result from fifty open bars and those that exist now will be so great that I have an abiding conviction amounting in mind to a moral certainty that the pendulum of public opinion in Oakland will swing back violently in 1912 to the present law, in which event you will have but two years of prosperous sales over your bar. Why not quit the business or else obey the law, whether it be a license or a prohibitory law?"

Now Enjoying Himself in San Diego, California.

HE SAYS IT RESEMBLES CHARLEVOIX

Former Residents Are Making Good in Western Home.

The Doctor Is Enjoying Himself But Will Be Glad to Get Home—California Farmers Good Road Builders.

San Diego, Calif., February 23, 1910.
DuBois & Usher,
"COURIER," Charlevoix, Mich.
My dear frends:—

First, this is to remind my friend Usher that he told me when I left that he would see that I got the "COURIER." I presume he has never once thaught about his promise, at least I have never received a paper. However, I have seen one or two copies of the COURIER and Sentinel through the kindness of Mrs. Ed Parmalee. Essie is her given name, daughter of our own Governor Butters. Essie is a leader socially and is president of the San Diego Musical Club, etc., etc.

This is a small world after all. I was walking past a store on my way to the post office, the second day I landed here, when I heard: "Hello George, better come in and see a fellow" and Ben Ingalls came up laughing. A day or two after I was talking to a real estate agent, there are very few in that business here, and he said: "Here comes my partner, he is a Michigan man," and Arthur Johnson of Boyne City said: "Hello Doctor." Then George Frost, of the East Jordan Lumber Company, is here and is one of the very heavy real estate dealers and builders, but King of the Castle, is our own Ed Parmelee.

Essie and Ed have made our life worth while living in San Diego. They have something for us to do every day and every night. Mr. Parmalee is business manager of the "San Diego Union" and "The Evening Tribune," the morning and evening papers, the leading dailies in this port of California. I will mail you to day's Union. Isn't it a fine paper? We lost one of the best business men Charlevoix ever had when Ed left us. Everybody is his friend and he has been very successful financially, and has a fine family, two sons and a daughter. One of his son's is attending Annapolis and the other will graduate this spring from the high school here. The daughter Claire, is an accomplished musician, and by the way, one of the finest looking girls I have seen in California. She was born in Charlevoix that accounts for it.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Parmalee, we were invited by Lieut. Frank Gross to lunch aboard the United States Torpedo Destroyer "Truxton." This was an honour and very enjoyable, as I had never been aboard a torpedo boat. I counted eleven United States fighting boats in this fleet. It is one of this fleet that blew out a tube and killed a firemen, and injured several others.

It will be hard to find any fault with conditions at San Diego. The nights are just cool enough for comfort and the days are perfect. Blue sky, blue ocean and green fields, and lawns and snow capped mountains in the distance. Calla lillies and beautiful flowers on all sides, make up a view warth coming to San Diego to see. The climate here I like better than in Pasadena or Los Angeles or any of the places we have visited so far in California.

San Diego, the beautiful, has about 50,000 inhabitants and is like Charlevoix in several respects, as it is a resort city. At almost every intersection of the streets you can see the beautiful Pacific Ocean, and from the high resident sites, you look on the ocean all the time, just like our north side people have a fine view of our beautiful Lake Michigan. The harbor is completely land-locked and is about as large as Round and Pine Lake together is perfectly secure from the effects of any storm that may sweep the ocean, its area is about twenty-two square miles and I believe the navies of the world could be anchored in this harbor.

Fruit Orchard of Frank Edgecomb, Peninsular Township, Grand Traverse County, when thousands of trees were in blossom.

As I view this country at present, it is not the country for a poor man, as there is little or no manufacturing. Fruits and farming does not pay as well as in Michigan. Water is king. However, the price is only ten cents per thousand gallons, with a discount if paid promptly. The mountains are high, so is land. Everything else is reasonable. We can live here as cheaply as in Charlevoix.

To-day with the mercury standing at seventy, I can hardly imagine the snow and cold, the Buffalo overcoats, the cold hands and feet at home, as I have on my summer clothes and never think of an overcoat, but do you know a fellow gets awfully tired of this sameness day after day, month after month, and I am now commencing to long for a change, snow, rain, or a cloud as big as your hand. A change of climate, meeting new conditions and people is pleasant and profitable, but give me Michigan and my Charlevoix for all the year living. People lose much of their ambition for work out here. Most of them make their money in the east and come here when they are old to sleep.

The thing they are doing here and that is making miles and miles of roads. This county voted a million and a half last year for good roads and they have an eastern engineer in charge of this work. They are doing it right. Nine out of ten farmers voted for the bonds, realizing that it was their salvation.

Most of the farmers here have automobiles and the Buick is king of them all, for it is a hill climber and stands the racket.

We will start north about March 10. After leaving California we intend spending several weeks in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Vancouver.

Wishing you health, happiness and prosperity, I am,

Yours truly,
G. W. Crouter.

BASKET BALL SEASON ENDED

With Two Good Games Played on Friday Evening.

MANCELONA DEFEATS HOME TEAM

While High School Girls are Victors Over Normals.

First Season Has Been a Success in Every Particular and Next Season is Anxiously Looked Forward to.

Friday evening escorted the last games of the basket ball season to its finish in this city with two well played games. The high school girls defeated the Normal girls in the second girls' game of the year. In the second game the Mancelona boys defeated the local boys by a score of 11 to 20.

The girls played fifteen minute halves and exercised more vim than the previous game. Although the high school lineup was greatly changed the team work was somewhat improved. Miss Florence Elliott and Miss Vera Nowland played the star positions on the high school team. A live like Miss Elliott would do fast basket work. Mr. Miller refereed this game. Score, 15 to 14.

The season of 1909-10 is the first Charlevoix has ever had a basket ball team. With such an obstacle the way the students should be given due credit for their hard work in playing their games with experienced players of previous years. The locals have only won one, their first, game this year. Regardless of almost certain defeat they have played their best and tried to win.

Mancelona came here with the record of winning nine of thirteen games and left with one more to their credit. At Bellaire Saturday night they defeated Bellaire by a score of 21 to 15. Mancelona has played a total of fifteen games, seven at home and eight away. Their total score to date is 656 and the opponents scored 328, crediting Mancelona with two points for every point scored by their opponents. Mancelona has the fastest team in this part of Michigan. All members are experienced, understanding every point of the game. Their team work is very clever and is closely guarded.

The line-up of the boys' game is as follows:

Charlevoix	Position	Mancelona
Durgan	C	Barnard
Jacobs	R F	Babcock
Paddock	L F	Nowark
Mitchell	L G	Lockhoff
Crane	R G	Ryder

The boys' game was played in twenty minute halves:

FIRST HALF

Ball to Charlevoix territory and Mancelona fouls. Jacobs scores one point. Ball to Mancelona territory and Barnard scored a basket from the field. The ball comes in play from the center and Barnard again scores two points. The next two plays resulted in Babcock scoring two baskets of two points from the field. Mancelona fouls Charlevoix and Nowack, for the visitors, disputes the decision and, Referee Brown awards three free throws to Charlevoix. Jacobs tries and makes one of the three basket throws.

In the next play Charlevoix covers the ball and Paddock fields a basket. Mancelona fields a basket in return through Babcock. Charlevoix fouls and Barnard scores one point. Mancelona covers the ball and Barnard fields two points. Charlevoix covers and fields two points through Mitchell, followed by Jacobs and Paddock in the next two plays for the same count. Time called and score is 15 to 10 in favor of Mancelona.

Elmer W. Lyon of Mancelona acted as umpire and Fred Brown of Boy City was referee in the first half, reversing positions in the last half. Loren Hart of this city was the official scoreman and Spaf. Sawyer of Mancelona was the official time-keeper.

The girls and side-line rooters announced their presence with school yells during the ten minute intermission between the halves.

SECOND HALF

Wallace plays in Mitchell's place in this half.

Ball goes to Mancelona's territory and Babcock scores two points. In the next eight plays from the center Mancelona scored eight two-point basketa through her stars in the following order: Babcock, Barnard, Babcock, Nowack three-basket, Barnard, Babcock. Charlevoix recovers and Jacobs scores a two count basket, followed by Durgan for the same count. Mancelona covers the ball and Barnard scores a field basket followed by Wallace with the same score. Charlevoix fouls and Barnard scores a free throw. Mancelona covers ball and Nowack scores two points. Mancelona again holds sway and Barnard secures two field baskets, all two center plays. Mancelona fouls and Jacobs tallies a free throw. In the next center play Barnard registered two more points. The visitors foul and Jacobs adds another free throw for the locals. Ball fielded into Charlevoix territory and Wallace tries for basket, time being called just as the ball left his hands. The final score was 41 to 20 in favor of the visiting star team.

The Charlevoix City Band rendered several selections throughout the evening and their services are greatly appreciated by the school and faculty as well as the spectators and visiting teams.

The officers of the Athletic Association report the basket ball season a success, although their expenses were very steep, and feel assured that next year's team will win more games and gain better houses in this great winter sport.

FORMER RESIDENT

George W. Miller died at his Home in Traverse City

Was Charlevoix Business Man for Several Years.

George W. Miller, formerly a Charlevoix business man, died at his home in Traverse City Saturday morning.

George Washington Miller was born at Old Mission May 15, 1851. When but five years old the family moved to Omena, where they lived for about thirteen years. After their residence at Omena the family moved to Traverse City. After staying there a few years Mr. Miller removed to Charlevoix where he entered the employ of Fox, Rose & Buttals of this city, afterward going into business for himself.

While in Charlevoix he was united in marriage to Miss Ida Whitcomb of this city on October 1, 1871. Three daughters were born of this union, Katherine, who died at the age of ten years, and Myrtle and Lela, both of whom are living in Traverse City. After staying in in Charlevoix for fifteen years, Mr. Miller moved to Traverse City and started in business. Mrs. Miller died in Charlevoix in 1898.

After having conducted his business successfully in that city for several years, Mr. Miller sold out, and after spending a short vacation was employed as manager of the clothing department of the Hannah & Lay Mercantile Company, which position he held until a few months ago when taken sick.

Mr. Miller was an influential member of two of the lodges in Traverse City having been a Mason since the age of twenty-one years, having joined in Charlevoix. He was also a member of the K. of P. lodge. Mr. Miller was a member of of the Grace Episcopal church of Traverse City, where he had many friends.

George Miller had a very wide circle of friends in this city who will miss him greatly, and who extend their sympathies to his relatives.

The funeral services were held from the home on State street Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, Rev. C. D. Atwell of the Grace Episcopal church officiating. The remains were brought to this city Monday morning, where they met by the Charlevoix Masons and laid to rest by the side of his wife.

MEETING WAS A BIG SUCCESS

Of Charlevoix County Fruit Grower's Association.

HELD IN THIS CITY MARCH FIRST

Next Meeting Will Be Held at Boyne City, April 1.

Setting, Spraying and Cultivating Will Be the Topic for Discussion—Better Fruit and Better Prices the Slogan.

The Charlevoix County Fruit Grower's Association met in the Van Pelt hall in Charlevoix on March 1 and was called to order by the President W. P. Squier at 1:45 p. m. with seventy-five fruit growers present.

The topic for this meeting was spraying and trimming but those present did not confine themseves to this subject very closely and many other points were discussed.

The County Normal class was present and were all busy taking notes and the points brought out at this meeting will find their way to the school room later through these young people.

William Straw says that he is always careful to trim off all bruised roots and that he cuts roots on a bevel so that the flat side of the root will lie on the ground. He likes the low topped trees on account of the less danger of damage by wind and also on account of the convenence in picking, spraying and trimming.

Mr. Anderson says that he always trims his young trees to three or at most four branches and leaves these not more than three or four inches long. He likes a medium heighth tree and would start the top from five to seven feet from the ground.

Mr. Withers says he trims so as to avoid crotches in trees.

The various points brought out by these gentlemen in regard to the forming of a top on a young tree prove that with care a top may be started at any desired height from the ground and that with proper care a symmetrical top may be formed.

Grafting was discussed to some extent but the most important thing that was brought out was the fact that an otherwise worthless tree could be made valuable in this way.

Mr. Wilgenson believes in thorough pruning and says that he keeps at it every year and thus avoids the necessity of cutting large branches though he will cut a large one when necessary.

A great deal of the pruning can be done by simply rubbing off buds when they are starting.

He says that a young orchard should be carefully cultivated and that farmers should avoid straw crops as they always sap the trees and prevent a good growth.

I may here again mention the fact that early cultivation is essential in order to get the wood growth in condition for winter and avoid winter killing.

The general discussion shifted from the tree or producing factory to the finished product.

Captain Flanagan, who sailed the lakes for years and who is now employed by some Chicago parties in taking care of some farms near Ironton where they have purchased

ANOTHER HOLD UP

We have just learned the fact of a whole sale robbery. On account of the lighting distribution in our city, whereas the use of the new Maxda Type of Tungstens has never been thoroughly explained to the consumers of Electric Current.

Why should you pay for something you do not get? When your monthly electric light bill comes in, you are charged for 16 watts on every 16 candle Power Carbon lamp which has done you no good or from which you have received no benefit. A 16 watt Maxda will not only give you more light but will consume but 10 watts, while an ordinary 16 C. P. Carbon lamp will consume 56 watts, and gave you less light.

NEW TYPE OF ROAD.

Telford Blocks With Liquid Asphalt as a Binder to Be Tried In Jersey.

New Jersey is to experiment with a new type of road, and the experiment will be tried in Essex county, where the county engineer, James Owen, proposes to lay roads in West Orange, Nutley, Belleville, Verona, Short Hills, Millburn, West Caldwell and other places. The state is to pay one-third of the cost of these new roads, each municipality one-tenth of the cost of the roads within its limit, and the county pays the balance. Mount Pleasant avenue, West Orange, is to be the first scene of the new road trial. Telford pavement is to be used under a new formula prepared by Mr. Owen, and he thinks that such a road will stand automobile traffic splendidly, and, while it will not be absolutely dustless, it will be less dusty than any other road of a similar kind.

After the telford blocks are laid instead of using clay as a binder liquid asphalt will be used. This has been successfully tried as a binder in connection with patent road formula, and, while it will add about 15 cents a square yard to the cost, it will be cheaper in the end. The foundation of the road will be constructed in the ordinary way and rolled in the usual manner. Then a coating of some screenings will be applied and rolled. Next will come a four inch layer of broken stone and another thorough rolling. On top of this will be put a thin layer of screenings to fill the interstices; then the liquid asphalt will be put on hot in the proportion of one and one-third gallons to each square yard of surface. It will then be given from five to ten hours to penetrate and then another coating of screenings and the road rolled again, and then will be ready for use.

LAYING A TELFORD FOUNDATION

Many will not agree with Mr. Owen that telford block is good for automobiling, as it is well known it is very hard on tires, but it makes a very solid, even road, and until the horse drawn vehicles make it bad it is all right.

What county engineers and other road builders should try to do is to build a road that will stand the horses and the iron shod wagons, and after doing that they will have solved the good roads problem.

GOOD ROADS IN GEORGIA.

Talk of a Seven Hundred Mile Road Between Atlanta and Washington.

The Good Roads club of Georgia has started a movement for the construction of an improved highway between Atlanta and Washington, about 700 miles. The plan is that each of the counties in the different states should agree to maintain the highway after it has been completed. The rapid spread of interest in automobiles has aroused the Georgia men to the urgent need of better roads in the south, and they believe that an improved highway from Atlanta to the national capital would give a great impetus to the good roads movement all over the south.

It has been suggested by the projectors of the proposed highway that the authorities of each county agree to round up, roll and ditch one of the existing connecting roads from border to border and improve it with a macadam surface as soon as possible. It is believed that this plan can be carried out so that motorists will be able to travel over a continuous stretch of fairly good roads by the middle of the coming summer. It is suggested that the dirt roads which must be included in the highway be kept in condition by using split log drags similar to the one devised by D. Ward King of Missouri. The farmers of Georgia are just as enthusiastic over the plan as the automobilists of the state.

Irrigation and Good Roads.

J. C. Osgood, honorary vice president for Colorado of the seventeenth national irrigation congress, which will meet at Spokane, Wash., Aug. 3, recently wrote a letter to the secretary of the board of control in which, among other things, he said:

"I think a good roads convention would add greatly to the interest of the coming congress, but I go further than wanting merely good roads. I want the very best roads, and I believe that the people of the irrigation states have a claim on the government for large expenditures in the building of the principal roads through the mountainous and sparsely settled sections of the country equal in character to the best roads of France, England and Germany."

A good home garden is a great institution. It means more on many farms than the crop of wheat, corn or oats. It furnishes food for the family throughout the summer and, if properly handled, a liberal supply for winter. Some gardens are handled so skillfully that there is a surplus of vegetables for sale almost every week. It means much to the farmer and his family and should be planned with the utmost care and given the very best attention

Avoid the Cheap and "Big Can" Baking Powders.

The cheap baking powders have but one recommendation: they certainly give the purchaser plenty of powder for his money, but its not all baking powder: the bulk is made up of cheap materials that have no leavening power. These powders are so carelessly made from inferior materials that they will not make light, wholesome food. Further, those cheap baking powders have a very small percentage of leavening gas; therefore it takes from two to three times as much of such powder to raise the cake or biscuit as it does of Calumet Baking Powder. Therefore, in the long run, the actual cost to the consumer of the cheap powders is more than Calumet would be. Cheap baking powders leave the bread sometimes bleached and acid, sometimes yellow and alkaline, and often unpalatable. They are never of uniform strength and quality.

Why not buy a perfectly wholesome baking powder like Calumet, that is at the same time moderate in price and one which can be relied upon? Calumet is always the same, keeps indefinitely, and gives the cook the least trouble. 26-1

Chapter 22

ORDE had made his dispositions as the general disposes of his army. At this point five men could keep the river clear at that rapid it would require twenty, and yet an emergency might call for thirty. Those thirty must not be beyond reach. Among the reputier wildernesses every section must have its driving camp. The crews of each would be expected to keep clear and running their own "beats" on the river. As fast as the rear crew should overtake these divisions either it would absorb them or the members of them would be thrown forward beyond the lowermost boat, to take charge of a new division downstream. A walking boss would trudge the river trail or ride the logs holding the correlation of these many units. Orde himself would drive up and down the river, overseeing the whole campaign.

Orde found himself rather short handed. He had counted on three hundred men for his crews, but scrape and scratch as he would he was unable to gather over 250. However, later, when the woods camps should break up, he would pick up more men.

"They won't be rivermen like my old crew, though," said Orde regretfully to Tom North, the walking boss.

Until the logs should be well adrift Orde had resolved to boss the rear crew himself.

The rear crew being farthest upstream, Orde had taken the contract to bleed the rollways belonging to Carlin, which would be piled on the bank. This he could get to work immediately at the breakup and with out waiting for some one else. The lumber in Carlin's drive would keep the men below busy until the other owners should also have put their season's cut adrift.

The ice went out early. When the river ran clear in its lower reaches he took his rear crew to Carlin's rollways. This crew was forty in number, a hard bitten, tough band of veterans, weather beaten, scarred in numerous fights or by the backwoods scourge of smallpox, compact, muscular, fearless, loyal, outspoken and free to criticise. In short, men to do great things under a strong leader. The breaking of the rollways began. The logs had been hauled to the river, where they were banked in piles twenty and even thirty feet in height. The bed of the stream itself was filled with them for a mile, save in a narrow channel left down through the middle to allow for some flow of water; the banks were piled with them, side on, ready to roll down at the urging of the men.

First the entire crew by means of its peavies rolled the lower logs into the current to be rapidly borne away. Some logs would be stuck together by ice and considerable prying and heaving were necessary in order to crack them apart. But forty men soon had the river full. Orde detailed some six or eight to drop below in order that the river might run clear to the next section, where the next crew would take up the task. Those men walked to the edges of the rollway, rolled a log apiece into the water, stepped aboard, leaned against their peavies and were swept away by the swift current. The logs on which they stood whirled in the eddies, carromed against other timbers, slackened speed, shot away. Never did the riders alter their poises of easy equilibrium.

The evening of the second day Orde received a visit from Jim Denning, foreman of the next section below, bringing with him Charlie, the cook of Daly's last year's drive.

"This fellow drifted in tonight two days late after a drunk, and he tells a mighty queer story," said Denning. "He says a crew of sixty bad men from the Saginaw have been sent in by Heinzman just to fight and annoy us."

"Well, where are they?"

"Don't know."

"Bring him over and let's hear the story," said Orde.

"It's straight, Mr. Orde," said the cook, approvingly. "There's a big crew brought in from the Saginaw waters to do you up. They're supposed to be over here to run his drive, but really they's goin' to fight and raise h—; for why would he want sixty men to break out them little rollways of his'n up at the headwaters? He only owns a 'forty' up there, and it ain't more'n half cut anyway."

"I didn't know he owned any."

"Yes, sir. He bought that little Johnson piece last winter."

"Is he breaking out his rollways below?" Orde asked Denning.

"No, sir," struck in Charlie, "he ain't."

"How do you happen to be so wise?" inquired Orde.

"Well," explained Charlie, "when I got back from the woods last week I just sort of happened into McNeill's place. I wasn't drinkin' a drop," he cried virtuously in answer to Orde's smile.

"Of course not," said Orde. "I was just thinking of the last time we were in there together."

"That's just it!" cried Charlie. "They was always sore at you about that. Well, in blew old man Heinzman and McNeill himself. I just lay low and heard their talk. They didn't see me, so they opened her up wide."

"What did you hear?"

"Well, McNeill he agreed to get a gang of bad ones from the Saginaw to run in on the river. And McNeill said, 'That's all right about the cash, Mr. Heinzman, but I been liggerin' on gettin' even with Orde for some myself.' He's payin' them $4 a day. Now, who'd pay that for just river work?"

Orde nodded at Jim Denning.

"Hold on, Charlie," said he. "Why are you giving all this away if you were working for Heinzman?"

"I'm workin' for you now," replied Charlie with dignity. "And, besides, you helped me out once yo'self."

"If that crew's been sent in there it means only one thing at that end of the line," said Orde.

"Sure. They're sent up to waste out the water in the reservoir and 'mang this end of the drive," replied Denning.

"What would you do?" asked Orde.

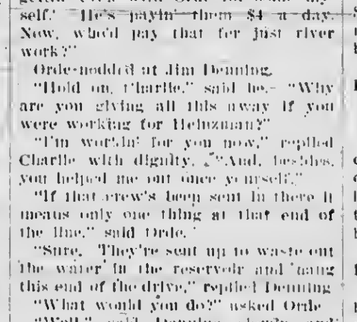
"Well," said Denning slowly and with a certain grim joy, "I don't bet those Saginaw river pigs are any more than fisted them the boys on this river I'd go up and clean 'em out."

"Won't do," negatived Orde briefly. "In the first place, as you know very well, we're short handed now, and we can't spare the men from the work. In the second place, we'd hang up sure."

"It isn't a fair game. Delay will hang us. Taking men off the work will hang us. I've got to see what can be done by talking to them."

"Talking!" Denning snorted. "You might as well whistle down the draft pipe of hades! They'll kill you, sure!"

"I'm scared. I'm willing to admit it. But I don't see what else to do. Of course he's got no rights, but what good does that do us after our water is gone? And, Jim, my son, if we hang this drive I'll be buried so deep I never will dig myself out. No; I've got to go."



"I'm working for you now."

Chapter 23

A GROUP of three small log cabins marked the Johnson and later the Heinzman camp. From the chimneys a smoke arose. Twenty or thirty rivermen lounged about the sunny side of the largest structure. Orde chucked to his horses, and the spidery wheels of the buckboard swung lightly over the wet hummocks, to come to a stop opposite the men.

"Why, Jim Bourke!" cried Orde.

"Hello, boys!" said he cheerfully.

No one replied. Orde looked them over with some interest. They were a dirty, unkempt, unshaven, hard looking lot, with bloodshot eyes, a flicker of the daredevil in expression, beyond the first youth, hardened into an enduring toughness of fiber—bad men from the Saginaw in truth and, unless Orde was mistaken, men just off a drunk and therefore especially dangerous, men eager to fight at the drop of the hat and ready to employ all the terrifying weapons of the rough and tumble.

"Who's your boss?" asked Orde.

"The Rough Red," a man snarled.

Orde had heard of this man, of his personality and his deeds. Like Silver Jack of the Muskegon, his exploits had been celebrated in song. A big, broad faced man, with a red beard, strong as a bull and savage as a wild beast, it was said that while jobbing for Morrison & Daly in some of that firm's Saginaw valley holdings the Rough Red discovered that a horse had gone lame. He called the driver of that team before him, seized an iron starting bar and with it broke the man's leg. "Try th' lameness yourself, Barney Mallan," said he. To appeal to the charity of such a man would be utterly useless. Orde saw this point. He picked up his reins and spoke to his team.

A huge riverman planted himself squarely in the way. The others, rising, slowly surrounded the rig.

He drove deliberately ahead, forcing the men to step aside, and stopped his horses by a stub. He tied them there and descended. A huge form appeared above the river bank.

Orde made out the great square figure of the boss, his soft hat, his flaming red beard, his dingy mackinaw coat, his dingy black and white checked flannel shirt, his dingy blue trousers tucked into high socks, and, instead of driving boots, his ordinary lumberman's rubbers. In a moment he thrust through the brush and stood before Orde. He stared at the young man and then, with a wild Irish yell, leaped upon him. Orde, caught unaware, was unable to struggle against the gigantic rivernan. He was pinned back against the wall, and the Rough Red's face was within two feet of his own.

"And how are ye, ye ould darlint?" shouted the latter, with a roll of oaths.

"Why, Jim Bourke!" cried Orde.

The Rough Red jerked him to his feet and pounded him mightily on the back.

"You ould smoozer!" he bellowed. "Where th' blankety blank did ye come from? Eyes," he shouted to the men, "it's me ould boss on th' Au Sable six year back—that time, ye mind, whin we had th' ice jam! Glory be, but I'm glad to see ye!"

"I didn't know you'd turned into the Rough Red," laughed Orde.

The Rough Red grinned.

"What have ye been doin'?"

"That's just it, Jimmy," said Orde, drawing the glum one side, out of ear shot. "All my eggs are in one basket, and it's a mean trick of you to hire out for filthy here to kick that basket."

"What do ye mane?" asked the Rough Red.

"You don't mean to tell me," countered Orde, "that this crew has been sent up here just to break out those measly little rollways?"

"Thim?" said the Rough Red. "Thim's—Not much! Thim's my body guard. They can lick their weight in wild cats, and I'd loike well to see th' gang of highbankers that bullies this river thry to pry thim out. We were shtat here to folght. Me boss and th' shoker that's drolven this river has a row on!"

"Jimmy," said Orde, "didn't you know that I am the gentleman last mentioned? I'm driving this river and that's my dam-keeper you've got hid away somewhere here, and that's my water you're planning to waste!"

"What?" In a tone of vast astonishment, the Rough Red mentioned his probable deserts in the future life.

"Lak here, Jack," said he after a moment, "there's a crew of white water fighters that ye can't lick nowheres. What do ye want us to do? We're now gettin' $1 a day and board from that murderin' ould villain Heinzman, so we can afford to wurrk for ye cheap."

Orde hesitated.

"Oh, please do, Carlin!" whispered Red's little eyes aglitter with malice. "Send us some more rollways. And we'll help to run your rollways. And all at once ye go now ye w—at this dam, and that's the way she'll be. Come, now, deny and ain't ye short handed now?"

Orde shrugged his knee and laughed.

"This is sure one device of a joke," he cried. "It sure be."

"I'll take you boys on," said Orde at last, "at the usual wages dollar and a half for the jam, three for the rear. I'd bet if you'll see much of Heinzman's money when this breaks on."

Chapter 24

THUS Orde, by the sheer good luck that sometimes favors men engaged in large enterprises, not only frustrated a plan likely to bring failure to his interests, but filled up his crews. It may be remarked here, as well as later, that the "terrors of the Saginaw," stayed with the drive to its finish and proved reliable and tractable in every particular.

The Rough Red's enormous strength, daredevil spirit and gladness of body made him invaluable at this dangerous work. The crews on the various beats now had their hands full to keep the logs running. The slightest check at any one point meant a jam, for there was no way of stopping the unending procession.

Jams on the river, contrary to general belief, are of very common occurrence. Throughout the length of the drive there were probably three or four hangups a day. Each of these had to be broken, and in the breaking was danger.

Orde after the rear was well started patrolled the length of the drive in his boat to head off. All logs he recalled at once and for several days watching the trend of the work. The improvements made during the preceding summer gave him the greatest satisfaction, especially the aprons at the falls.

No trouble was experienced with Heinzman's rollways were reached. Here Orde had to round a free chance to prevent Heinzman from filling up the entire river bed with his rollways. When the jam of the drive had descended the river as far as this Heinzman had not yet begun to break out. Hardly had Orde's first crew passed, however, when Heinzman's men began to break down the logs into the drive. Long before the rear caught up Heinzman's drive was in the water, mingled with the sixty or eighty million feet Orde had in charge.

The situation was plain. All Heinzman now had to do was to retain a small crew, which should follow after the rear in order to sack what logs the latter should leave stranded. As it was impossible in so great a mass of timbers and in the haste of a pressing labor to distinguish or discriminate against any single brand, Heinzman was in a fair way to get his logs sent downstream with practically no expense.

"Well, my boy," remarked the German quite frankly to Orde as they met on the road one day, "looks like I got you dis time, eh?"

WE constantly hear knockers, complaining about the financial condition of our city, who are not conversant with the true state of affairs. In reality Charlevoix has much to be proud of, very few cities of this size, if any, having so much to show in the way of municipal improvements. Dr. Swinton, who is in position to know, gives us the following facts in regard to the city's finances. The city owes, at the present time, $105,000. Against that indebtedness, it owns $91,200 worth of property which could be sold at any time for its full value. It owns in addition $12,600 in property which could be easily realized upon. Besides these available assets it has $9,140 worth of property which in reality is worth more and over $2,000 in bills due, making its assets double its indebtedness. This statement is full and sufficient proof of how well the interests of the city have been looked after by its officials.

MEETING WAS A BIG SUCCESS

and purpose setting a big fruit farm says that when he was sailing he always loaded at Old Mission and some other points down the lake because he could get his load quickly in those places thus giving another proof that the matter of a market for fruit is generally solved when a community will produce a sufficient amount to entice shippers to the locality.

He says that the Chicago parties propose to spend $5,000 in preparing their farm for fruit.

Mr. Meechan mentioned some things regarding the color of the fruit and says that the matter of low heading of trees will endanger the proper coloring of apples.

One very important point that was made regarding the selection of varieties was that when producing a commercial product, we must select the variety that the market demands.

We may personally know from experience that a certain apple is an excellent keeper and that it has an excellent flavor but in nine cases out of ten it is in the looks of an apple that will attract the buyer.

Mr. See, who has been in the business in Charlevoix spoke of this and mentioned several varieties that always are in demand among which were the Snow, Duchess, Wolf River, Baldwin and twenty ounce Pippin.

Says that there are other varieties that he personally likes better than some of these but that on account of their color or size or for some other reason, generally pertaining to the looks of the article, they are not in demand.

Farmers who contemplate setting orchards for commercial stock should look to this matter carefully and inform themselves as to the varieties that are most in demand.

It may be that you do not like a certain apple but if there is a demand for it, it will pay to raise it whether we like it or not.

Mr. Ward spoke of the Chicago exhibit and of the Michigan fruit there. He said that he found apples selling at three for ten cents, which were from Michigan while the western apples were selling at four for ten cents.

He said that the merchants never boomed the Michigan article on account of the fact that so many of them were culls and had to be handled at a loss while the western fruit was nearly all good.

The best samples of our apples will beat the west in color, size and flavor but they beat us because they raise their fruit right and it is all good.

Dr. Armstrong stirred things up in a plea for better methods and a more determined effort to raise a good article.

He saw the exhibition in Chicago and insists that the best specimens of our apples can beat the best specimens that the west can produce and that there is no reason why our whole crop may not be as good as our best specimens and that it will be if we will make an effort to educate ourselves and will prepare to meet the little animal and vegetable enemies of the fruit industry.

Mr. Squiers mentioned the fact that the representative of a Chicago firm who came here to look into the fruit matter after looking things over, simply telegraphed the firm, "Stock not Good," and gave as his reasons for so doing that the apples were not colored, were too small because they had not been thinned and that too many of them were wormy. Care and attention will remove all of these objections.

The matter of a nursery for Northern Michigan, was mentioned and should be studied by the farmers. Northern grown trees are better than any others and can be had cheaper. Nurseries are out of trees now and buyers should be careful.

Setting, Spraying and Cultivating will be discussed at the next meeting which will be held at Boyne City, April 1.

ADAPTABILITY OF ALFALFA.

Crops Produced In Most Climates of the United States.

While experts have been declaring that alfalfa would grow only in certain soils and in certain climates, it has proved adaptability to nearly all climates and almost all soils. It produces with a rainfall as small as fourteen inches and in the gulf states flourishes with sixty-five inches. It gives crops at an elevation of 8,850 feet above sea level, and in southern California it grows below sea level, to a height of six feet or over, with nine cuttings a year, aggregating ten to twelve tons. An authenticated photograph shows a watermelon-attached plant raised in the irrigated desert of southern California sixty feet below sea level, that measured considerably more than ten feet in height. Satisfactory crops are raised, but on limited areas as yet, in Vermont and Florida. New York has grown it for over 100 years in her clay and gravel, Nebraska grows it in her western sand hills without plowing, as does Nevada on her sagebrush desert. The deepest cotton soils of Alabama and rich corn lands of Illinois and Missouri each responded generously with profitable yields to the enterprising farmer, while its accumulated nitrogen and the subsoil loosening effects are making the rich and more valuable and giving back to the crop worn and the priceless elements of which it has been in successive generations despoiled by a conscienceless husbandry.

Farm Value of Toads.

A naturalist has found some very interesting facts concerning the diet of the toad, and it is found that it is a benefactor of the farmer and gardener. It eats caterpillars and cutworms, beetles, sowbugs, snails, grasshoppers, moths, wireworms and potato bugs, all of which damage a farmer's crop or his goods to a serious degree. In the stomach of one toad were found seventeen thousand-legged worms, in another were thirty-seven tent caterpillars, in another sixty-five gypsy moths were found and in still another fifty-five army worms. It is said that eighty-six housefworms have disappeared down the throat of one toad in less than ten minutes, and the record of stuffing is held by another, who was still hungry after consuming ninety bugs. According to this observer, in ninety days a single toad may destroy 1,161 cutworms, 1,861 thousand-legs, 2,101 sowbugs and 360 weevils.

Farm Truck by Automobile.

It is interesting to know that many of the conveniences and helps which were supposed to belong to city society are now making their way into the country. Water fixtures in the houses, steam and hot water heaters and many other things which fifty years ago were rarely found outside a large town are now common in many farmhouses. Machinery which was thought to be of practical service only on smooth city streets may now be found in the country. The picture shows a large auto-truck which does the hauling for a fruit farm. It is shown in actual use at Greenwich, Conn., carrying peaches to market some eight miles distant. This machine has a fifty horsepower engine, its maximum speed is fifteen miles an hour, and its approximate cost is $1,000. The superintendent is much pleased with the machine in every way and says that it is very practical and serviceable and takes the place of at least six horses. Forty-three barrels of apples can be carried with perfect ease. It will carry a hundred bushels of potatoes. In the load shown here there are 100 baskets of peaches, and considerably more could have been added. Both trips to market are made to count, as, returning, the truck takes back supplies for the farm and its operation. Such a truck as this will climb any grade that is found on cradle thoroughfares, and ordinary mud ruts no terror for it at all. By means of trucks like these markets are brought close to the farmers, thus insuring a quick disposal of the farm products. Much labor is saved, and much more work can be accomplished for less money.

MOTOR CAR TRUCK FOR FRUIT FARM.

Weeding Out Unprofitable Cows.

Dairy farms are continually advancing in value, which should be regarded as part of the profits. Cradle turning is hard on the land.

With the case in test it will be possible to weed out the poor cheese cows on the same principle used in the Babcock butter test to weed out the poor butter cows. Instead of keeping cows for cheese which average 70 pounds of casein per 100 pounds of fat, one may breed cows that will produce milk containing close to 100 pounds of casein to 100 pounds of fat.

The Sitting Hen.

A hen left to herself will get off her nest very early in the morning, when the air is cool. She has the eggs heated to 103 or 104 degrees. She gets off the nest, and the cool air, coming in contact with the warm eggs, causes the moisture to precipitate, and this moistens them sufficiently without any additional moisture.

HIDDEN DANGERS

Nature Gives Timely Warnings That No Charlevoix Citizen Can Afford to Ignore

DANGER SIGNAL NO. 1 comes from the kidney secretions. They will warn you when the kidneys are sick. Well kidneys excrete a clear, amber fluid. Sick kidneys send out a thin pale and foamy, or a thick red, ill smelling urine, full of sediment and irregular of passage.

DANGER SIGNAL NO. 2 comes from the back. Back pains, dull and heavy, or sharp and acute, tell you of sick kidneys and warn you of the approach of dropsy, diabetes and Bright's disease. Doan's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys and cure them permanently. Here is proof in the statement of a nearby resident.

Mrs. S. C. Miller, Main St., Mancelona, Mich., says: "I have been wonderfully benefited by Doan's Kidney Pills. My back ached severely and my kidneys were sluggish. I felt poorly in every way and finally made up my mind to try Doan's Kidney Pills. I procured a supply and soon after commencing their use, I felt better than I had in months. You are welcome to use my name as one who can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills highly from personal experience."

Visit the Schools.

Report cards for grade pupils were given out Monday, March 7, and high school cards Tuesday, March 8. The report cards are given out the first Monday and Tuesday of each month. Any work marked lower than 85 is not considered satisfactory. A hard working and conscientious student should be able to get an average of 90 or above, if their previous preparation has been sufficient.

If the report card of any pupil does not show satisfactory work, teachers are anxious and willing to talk the matter over with the pupil, and would be more than pleased to talk with the parent. It is not possible for the teachers to visit all the homes, and the teacher is better prepared at the school house to answer questions regarding the work of the pupil as she can refer to her class records and examination papers. The teachers especially invite the parents to visit the schools and to remain after the session closes for conference.

Much better work would be done in the high school if parents of high school pupils would co-operate with the teachers. No pupil can do the regular work of the high school satisfactorily without home preparation of lessons. Parents can help much by making it possible for good home study and insisting that some part of every evening be used for study.

If parents cannot visit the high school classes, it will help if they call at the close of school for a visit with the teachers.

THEATRICAL

No matter how cleverly constructed or entertaining a play may be nor how much money may have been spent upon its scenic and costume equipment, if the play is well cast, or in other words if the actors portraying the different parts are not particularly adapted to the roles assigned, a good performance is impossible. More especially is this so of a dramatized novel, where nearly every one who has read the book has formed a mental portrait of the characters. Fully realizing this, Messers. Trousdale Bros. in selecting their cast for Harold McGrath's, "Man on the Box," to be presented at the Charlevoix theater on Tuesday night, March 15th, have exercised unusual care with the result that each member of the many characters in the play bear the impression of having stepped out of the story onto the stage.

ANOTHER PIONEER GONE

Myron Geer Who Had Lived Here Over Fifty Years

Was a Member of Baxter Post—Leaves Five Children.

Myron Geer, one of the oldest pioneers of this region, died at his home in this city Sunday after an illness lasting since last May.

Mr. Geer was born in St. Lawrence county, New York, seventy-four years ago. While a young man he removed to Lapeer county, Michigan, coming on a prospecting trip to Charlevoix county in 1847, returning a few years later and settling at Harbor Springs where he was married to Orlena Bailey.

In 1868 he came to this county and took up a homestead in Marion township where he resided until four years ago, when he retired and moved to this city.

He served in the civil war as a member of Company K, 7th Michigan Cavalry, from 1863 to 1865 and was a member of Baxter Post G. A. R.

Mrs. Geer died in 1891. Mr. Geer was married a second time to Lucretta Stanford, who with five children Reuben and Elisha Geer of this city, Harry of Cadillac, Mrs. Nettie Pease of Chicago, and Mrs. Martha Austin, of Traverse City and four sisters, Mrs. Richard Cooper, Mrs. Jack Papinaw, Mrs. S. Campbell and Mrs. H. Berdan all of Charlevoix survive him.

The funeral was held yesterday under the auspices of the G. A. R. and K. O. T. M. M., at the Congregational church, Rev. H. A. Putnam officiating. Burial at Brookside.

Seniors: Orville Beattie 90.17, Raymond Bennett 93.33, Hubert Paddock 92.07, Lilah Shupton 91.33; Juniors, Charles McGeagh 92.; Sophomores, Marion Parsons 90.8; Freshmen, Ida Levinson 90.4, Reva Lane 90, Hazel Mills 91, Agnes Worth 90.4, Doris Stevenson 93.33, Charles Wardrop 92, Edna Srigley 90.17, Enid Todd 92.2, Majorie Weaver 91.4.

The editorial staff of the Senior Annual, are busy getting material together for publication. A complete alumni history is being written, and the alumni editor will be very glad for any information regarding the address or occupation of any of the alumni.

Ten spelling contests between Charlevoix and Boyne City have been conducted with the following results; Charlevoix Seniors have won five and tied for the sixth, Juniors six, Sophomores three, and Freshmen six. Charlevoix school as a whole won only three out of the ten. The sophomore class seems to be the cause of defeat for the high school.

The staff have offered a pennant for the best original story for publication in the Annual.

Every representative of Charlevoix high school attending the University of Michigan this year passed the first semester's work without a single condition, some of them receiving high honors. Good reports also come from M. A. C.

There are over thirty graduates of the high school at present enrolled in higher institutions of learning, and the high school have every reason to be proud of their records.

A human being, like an inanimate machine, should be examined occasionally, if any part is found displaced, adjust it, using as much good sense in doing so as you would in reparing a watch or an organ. The jeweler does not light the wrong doings of a crippled watch, he gets at the cause of the difficulty and removes it. The Chiropractor does not "treat effects" but "removes the cause." Dr. L. E. Bon, Chiropractor, 108 Park avenue, at all times takes pleasure in showing those interested the difference between treating the effects and adjusting the cause of the disease. p5 10-t-4

"What associations?"

"Why, at chess you play with two bishops, while at cards you play with four knaves."

HER HOBBY.

It Led Her to Make Trouble, but She Rectified It.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Is there any one who has no hobby? Well, if there is it is questionable if such person is happy. We live lives—at least most of us do—that lie in beaten tracks.

The merchant that has built up a large business goes to his store every day to do pretty much the same thing. His wife stays at home, looks after the servants and makes calls. The doctor visits the sick and listens to an eternal round of aches and pains.

The clergyman preaches every Sunday and makes parochial visits. With all of us our occupation sooner or later becomes humdrum.

What, then, is our relief, our safety valve?

A hobby.

Hobbies are sometimes mere whims or they may be a fancy that a certain line of action under certain circumstances is essential. Of such kind was Nell Lambert's.

Her hobby was self control. She was accustomed to say that it was the only cultured substitute for contentment and that the result of its perfect attainment was perpetual youth. The quick growth of a frown habit and the wrinkles that follow in its wake were among her strongest arguments.

Nell was wooed and won by John Brent. She was very happy, and apparently John was happy too. The world seemed suddenly transformed from a very humdrum affair to a paradise. She managed to retain her self control, so far as telling any of her friends of her engagement was concerned. Then there was a lapse. Her friend Pattie Roane called, and Nell let out the secret.

Not long after Miss Roane's departure Pattie was standing at the parlor window which overlooked the street admiring some flowers that were kept in the window. She was thinking of her lover, and it seemed that the flowers looked up at her with a happy smile. Happening to glance up, her heart seemed to cease to beat.

"WE MEANT ONLY TO TEASE YOU A LITTLE."

There, driving down the street on his dogcart, with Miss Roane beside him, was John Brent. Nevertheless her habit of self control was strong enough to enable her to give the couple a gracious bow and a smile.

What did it mean? Had she not been in that breathless condition, love, when every shadow is a demon? She would probably have thought that there was no meaning to it whatever. As it was, she considered it in the light of an insult to both John and Pattie.

That evening John called. She received him graciously and chatted with him as if nothing had happened, but before he left told him that their engagement was a thing of the past. All this required great self control, but that self control she possessed.

The three weeks that followed found her still living up to the hobby. If she was a bit whiter and thinner the spirituelle effect was becoming, therefore welcome. There could be a house and a change of air spend the seaway stay of threaten. Pending that time her maid [illegible] announced, "Miss Roane."

"Lower the shades a trifle, Elsette," said Nell and glanced into her mirror. "Draw that stand of lilacs nearer, so Miss Roane may come up."

"How sensible you always are!" said Pattie, making at once for an easy chair. "Here have I for three weeks been afflicted with a conscience, and you—you look as if you never had one."

"Three weeks?"—smiling.—"It is a long time to carry anything heavy."

"Well," with a look half meek, half mischievous, "I have brought the burden to you."

"To me? I thought a conscience was like a railroad pass—always labeled 'not transferable.'"

"I only want it doctored."

"But that is a very trite idea. Is it not?"

"What I mean is not trite," said Pattie. She took a cluster of white lilacs from the stand and gently brushed her face with them. Keen eye shots could pierce such a hedge undetected. "Trite epithets are either easy or necessary."

"If you mean it is hard to do anything original"—

"But I do not. I mean this is original because too hard to be often undertaken."

"Yet it is only a little conscience to be doctored."

"There are things to tell you," gravely, "because we are friends."

"Present tense?"

"Yes," lowering the hedge to give a steady look.

"Very well," with a smile that held some sarcasm lurking beneath it; "tell on."

"That day after you told me of your engagement to John Brent I saw his dogcart before Ransom's, and I happened in, don't you know, and said something about such a royal day for driving and smiled up at him my very best smile. It was a bit of mischief. I knew you would be cool over the matter and wake his resentment."

"'Behold how great a fire a little spark kindleth,'" said unruffled Nell.

"I asked him to drive this way, and he laughed. We meant only to tease you a little—nothing serious."

"No?"

"Not then," bending her face into the lilacs.

"Well," coldly, "he is now free."

An eye shot passed over the hedge.

"Knowing how that drive came about, you are still too proud to recall him?"

Nell settled herself more coolly among the cushions of her divan and gave her prettiest low laugh. "Is thy servant a dog?" she said.

"But he would come," said Pattie gently.

"There is a better way to come."

"And if he does not choose it?"

"I am content," sang Nell sweetly.

"Then if he's free," said Pattie, well behind the flower hedge, "I ought to let you understand," hesitatingly, "that—that"—

"Oh, certainly," said Nell mockingly, "each one for herself."

"I should not have put it in just that way," Pattie went on, with a half nervous little laugh, "but I shall not avoid him or be at my worst with him."

"It is a woman's business," dryly, "to charm, especially to charm one man."

"If he is the right one," faltered Pattie Roane.

"True. Yet the wrong one is often entertaining and easier."

"And you do not care?" asked Pattie as she took up and put the flowers back in the vase. "But you'll believe, won't you, that I meant no wrong, that I did not know what would come?"

"You have not finished your story," said Nell, with sudden sharpness. "What has come to him—what has come?"

"If you would be sorry, I think," very low, "that he would be happy."

"Otherwise—in time?" breathlessly.

"Perhaps he may think of me," said Pattie and turned away her face.

She was going silently to the door when Nell, white as her lilacs, came to the hotel.

"You have been honest," she said chokingly, "so I will tell you. I cannot bear it," with a sob, "I cannot!"

Pattie flushed. "Do you want me to go away out of his reach?" she asked with voice that trembled and with lowered eyes.

"No, but I will write and ask him"—alas for the hobby, tears came—"ask him to forgive me."

"I will wait and post the letter," Pattie slowly and went back to her chair.

"He may be angry still, you know," Nell said wistfully when the note was written and her guest on the stair, but there was no answer.

Pattie hurried out to the corner mail box and, having dropped the letter inside, came around the turn of the street to the face with a sigh of

"I have been attending to some of your business," she said, with a happy laugh.

"Thank you. It could not be in better hands, I am sure," said John.

"I think so myself," radiantly. "Could you pick a lock or a corner post box?"

"Well, not without some training, I think."

"Then the best thing for you to do is to go on to Nell's. Say the proper things, you know," rapidly. "Say that you are a wreck from misery and cannot bear it any longer."

"But"

"That handsome Englishman has been sending more flowers, exquisite white lilacs. If I were you they should go out of a back window."

"But"

"She will be delighted that you came before the note reached you, but do not hint that you know about it."

"About what?"

"The note, the note, the note!"

"Pick a corner post box," said John dazedly, but with a slight dawning in his eye. "Nell has written me a note?"

"Oh, the slowness of a man's mind!" cried Pattie. "Are you going to stand here after all my brilliant plot while that girl sobs herself ill—ill waiting to know if you forgive her?"

John's answer was in the rapidity of his stride around the corner, and Pattie, the plotter, her face dimpling with smiles and ease of conscience, went far enough to peep and see him run up Nell's steps three at a time.

"Good!" she murmured, with a little chuckle. But it must be admitted that she deserved one.

That was Nell's last effort at controlling her feelings when she felt aggrieved. She had learned that standing out as if the right was all hers without giving the other side a hearing was not self control, but injustice. And Pattie Roane, whose mischievous disposition was always getting her into scrapes which her genial disposition usually got her out of, learned that her propensity for such larks should be curbed by a proper self control.

Keep Busy.

Shun idleness. It is the rust that attaches itself to the most brilliant metals.—Voltaire.

It is called The Woman's Local Option club of Antrim county and it has representatives in every organization in and around Bellaire. Similar clubs will be formed in different parts of the county and every effort will be made by the members to swell the enthusiasm in the fight against the liquor business. A finance committee has been appointed to work with the business men in securing funds for the campaign. On election day the Local Option club at Bellaire will serve a free dinner to every one, and the school children will sing temperance songs and occupy floats in the parade.

Of Rib has arranged to start the publication of a weekly newspaper at Alden under the title of the Alden Argus. The outlook at Rapid City was so unfavorable that any thought of reviving the Rustler was quite out of the question. Alden has been without a paper for a couple of years, has a nice contingent of enterprising business men who, with one of the finest locations in Antrim county and a splendid farming district contributary to it, cannot fail to help themselves and their town and business by according the promised liberal support to Of Rib and his new paper.

Over 100 highway commissioners declared in favor of this move and are receiving the hearty backing of the highway department of the state. The commissioners also urge that a law be passed limiting the size of the loads on narrow tired rigs, if it was impossible to secure more strict legislation.

W. Spaulding of Mulliken, asks the following question: "When driving a horse, if I meet an automobile I turn to the right. If one passes me going in the same direction which way should I turn? The question was answered by the prosecuting attorney of Eaton county, in the Charlotte Republican like this: "In case either a vehicle drawn by horses or a motor vehicle be overtaken by a motor vehicle, and the person in charge of the motor or vehicle shall express a desire to pass, it is the duty of the driver of the vehicle overtaken to turn to the right of the traveled portion of the highway, allowing the vehicle approaching from the rear to pass around to the left. In such case it is as much the duty of the driver of the motor vehicle to render assistance to the occupant of the vehicle he is passing, if requested, as though the two vehicles were approaching from opposite directions."—Charlotte Republican

The M. M. Babbit Company of Muscelona, has been organized lately. The new company makes a high speed babbit that stands the test where extra good babbit is needed. The composition of this new metal is a secret and Mr. Edwin Matthews of that village holds the formula. Some time ago Mr. Matthews made a sample and sent it to several large concerns to try out. In every case it proved a success. The outcome was the organization of the new company. They have erected shops there in which to make the babbit in large quantities and have a man on the road introducing it and selling.

I have several good homes and lots in the city of Charlevoix, to trade for farms.

JOEL JOHNSTON,

Pumpkins That Talk.

Even the farmer, once the type of simplicity and low progressiveness, is learning how to advertise through a knowledge of the weaknesses of nature. One of these weaknesses is found in the lordly pumpkin. Bribe a growing pumpkin and the scar will never be cleared away, but will show in the ripe pumpkin in the shape of delicate little yellow warts. Starting with this principle alone, several farmers have made their pumpkin farms valuable. After the vegetables get good sized and prove that they will be fine ones they go into the patch and with a sharp stick scar them so that when they are ready for market their happy faces bear in words of warts legends like these: "Eat me at Smiths." "Smith will make pies of me soon." "Brown's pies are best." "Jones' pies are delicious." "You can eat me inside."

The wily farmer hauls these warty fellows to market and, seeing Smith, Jones and Brown from their respective restaurants, shows the strange freak of nature. Of course a sale is made on sight, and the pumpkin lies at the front of the restaurant for a few days to astonish passers-by until it must be made into pies to save it. Then the farmer discovers another freak pumpkin, suitably marked, to replace it. Fancy prices are to be had for these pumpkins, and stony patches that would never pay taxes in any other crop produce wealth in pumpkins.

New Plants.

But few farmers have any idea of the great work our government is doing in the way of introducing new plants and fruits from the old world into the United States. During the last fiscal year more than 6000 specimens were brought in. The department of agriculture has explorers constantly on the outlook for all kinds of plants and fruits that promise well of good results in our climate. They are picked up as far off as Czechurk, Korea and China. There are specimens from wild apricot trees ten feet in diameter. There are wild grapes and wonderful persimmons and bush cherries and other curious and valuable specimens that most of us never even dreamed of.

Forges on the Farm.

The main advantage of having a small forge on a farm is not so much the saving of money as the saving of time. A little job of repairing can be done in the time that it would take to get to town and back, and the cost of the work is saved besides. A good portable forge can be bought for $5.

MILLIONS OF LIVES LOST

An Awful Toll Collected by Consumption Many Unnecessary Deaths From This Disease.

If people could only understand that systemic catarrh is an internal disease that external applications cannot cure, they would not need to be swindled so often about this maladdy, which, when neglected, paves the way to consumption, at the cost of millions of lives every year. Yet catarrh may be cured if the right treatment is employed.

Catarrh is caused by a general diseased state of the system which leads commonly to annoying and perhaps serious local conditions, which may prove a fertile breeding ground for germs of consumption. External remedies give but temporary ease.

The only way to successfully treat catarrh is by employing a medicine which is absorbed and carried by the blood to all parts of the system, so that the mucus membrane or internal lining of the body is toned up and made capable of resisting the infection of consumption and other diseases.

We have a remedy prepared from the prescription of a physician who for thirty years studied and made catarrh a specialty, and whose record was a patient restored to health in every case where his treatment was followed as prescribed. That remedy is Rexall Mucu-Tone. We are so positive that it will completely overcome catarrh in all its various forms, whether acute or chronic, that we promise to return every penny paid us for the medicine in every case where it fails for any reason does not satisfy the user.

We want you to try Rexall Mucu-Tone on our recommendation and guarantee. We are right here where you live, and you do not contract any obligations or risk when you try Rexall Mucu-Tone on our guarantee. We have Rexall Mucu-Tone in two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Very often the taking of one 50 cent bottle is sufficient to make a marked impression upon the case. Of course in chronic cases of longer treatment is necessary. The average in such instances is three $1.00 bottles. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store.—The Rexall Store.—The Ivy Drug Store, A. B. Fleischer, proprietor.

"If you mean your togs are going down with ours, why, I guess you have. But you paste this in your hat—you're going to keep awful busy, and it's going to cost you something to get 'em down."

Orde's drivers kept a sharp lookout for "H" logs and wherever possible thrust them aside into eddies and backwaters. This, of course, merely made work for the sackers Heinzman had left above the rear. Soon they were in charge of a very fair little drive of their own. Their lot was not enviable.

Thrust them aside into eddies.

One day when Orde's buckboard drew into camp he sent Bourke away to repair damages while he called the cookee to help unpack several heavy boxes of hardware. They proved to contain about thirty small hatchets, well sharpened and each with a leather guard. When the rear crew had come in that night Orde distributed the hatchets.

"Boys," said he, "while you're on the work I want you all to keep a watch out for these 'H' logs, and whenever you strike one I want you to blaze it plainly so there won't be any mistake about it."

"What for?" asked a Saginaw man.

A riverman nudged him.

"Just do what you're told to on this river and you'll see fun sure."

Three days later the rear crew ran into the head of the pond above Reed's dam. To every one's surprise, Orde called a halt on the work and announced a holiday.

Now, holidays are unknown on drive. Barely is time allowed for eating and sleeping. Nevertheless all that day the men lay about in complete idleness. The pond filled with logs. From above the current, aided by a fair wind, was driving down still other logs—the forerunners of the little drive astern. At sight of these some of the men grumbled. "We're losin' what we made," said they. "We left them logs and sorted 'em out once already."

Orde sent a couple of axmen to blaze the newcomers. A little before sundown he ordered the sluice gates of the dam opened.

"Night work," said the men to one another.

Sure enough, after supper Orde suddenly appeared among them.

"Get organized, boys," said he briskly. "We've got to get this pond all sluiced before morning."

The men took their places.

"Sluice through everything but the 'H' logs," Orde commanded. "Work them off to the left and leave them."

The sluicing, under the impetus of a big crew, went rapidly. "There's near a million an hour going through there," speculated Orde, watching the burdened waters of the chute. And in this work the men distinguished easily the new white blaze marks on Heinzman's logs, so they were able to shunt them one side into the smoother water, as Orde had commanded.

As the last log shot through Orde cried, "Tear out the booms!"

The chute to the dam was approached, as has been earlier explained, by two rows of booms arranged in a V, or funnel, the apex of which emptied into the sluiceway and the wide, projecting arms of which embraced the width of the stream. The logs, floating down the pond, were thus concentrated toward the sluice; also the rivermen, walking back and forth the length of the booms, were able easily to keep the drive moving.

Now, however, Orde unchained these boom logs. The men pushed them ashore, clamped in their peavies and, using these implements as handles, carried the booms back into the woods. Then everybody tramped back and forth, round and about, to confuse the trail. Orde was like a mischievous boy at a school prank.

The blazed logs belonging to Heinzman, drifting slowly, had sucked down into the corner toward the power canal, where, caught against the grating, they had jammed. These logs would have to be floated singly and pushed one by one against the current across the pond and into the influence of the sluice gate. Some of them would be hard to come at.

"I guess that will keep them busy for a day or two," commented Orde.

This, as Orde has said, would be sufficiently annoying to Heinzman, but would have little real effect on the main issue, which was that the German was getting down his logs with a crew of less than a dozen men. Nevertheless Orde in a vast spirit of fun took delight in inventing and executing practical jokes of the general sort just described. One day the chore boy, who had been over to Spruce Rapids after mail, reported that an additional crew of twenty had been sent in to Heinzman's drive. This was gratifying.

"We're making him scratch gravel, boys, anyway," said Orde.

The men entered into the spirit of the thing. In fact, their enthusiasm was almost too exuberant. Orde had constantly to negative new and ingenious schemes.

"No, boys," said he, "I want to keep on the right side of the law. We may need it later."

Logs rarely jam on rising water, for the simple reason that constantly the surface area of the river is increasing, thus tending to separate the logs. On the other hand, falling water, tending to crowd the drive closer together, is especially prolific of trouble. Therefore, on flood water the watchers scattered along the stretches of the river had little to do—save strand Heinzman's logs for him.

Up to a certain point this was all very well. Orde took pains not to countenance it officially and caused word to be passed about that, while he did not expect his men to help drive Heinzman's logs, they must not go out of their way to strand them.

"If things get too bad, he'll have spies down here to collect evidence on us," said Orde, "and he'll jug some of us for interference with his property. We don't own the river."

Inside of two weeks Orde had the great satisfaction of learning that Heinzman was working and working hard—a crew of fifty men.

"A pretty fair crew, even if he was taking out his whole drive," commented Orde.

The gods of luck seemed to be with the new enterprise. The water held out to carry the last stick of timber over the shallowest rapids. Weather conditions were phenomenal and perfect. All up and down the river the work went with vim and dash.

After this happy fashion the drive went until at last it entered the broad, deep and navigable stretches of the river from Redding to the lake. Here, barring the accident of an extraordinary flood, the troubles were over. On the broad, placid bosom of the stream the logs would float. As Orde sat in his buckboard, ready to go into town for a first glimpse of Carroll in more than two months, he gazed with an immense satisfaction over the broad river moving brown and glacierlike, as though the logs that covered it were viscid and composed all its substance. The enterprise was practically assured of success.

For awhile now Orde was to have a breathing spell. A large number of men were here laid off. The remainder, under the direction of Jim Denning, would require little or no actual supervision. Until the jam should have reached the distributing booms above Monrovia the affair was very simple. Before he left, however, he called Denning to him.

"Jim," said he, "I'll be down to see you through the sluiceways at Redding, of course. But now that you have a good, still stretch of river I want you to include in our drive all the Heinzman logs from above, you possibly can. If you can fix it, let their drive drift down into ours."

"Then we'll have to drive their logs for them," objected Denning.

"Sure," rejoined Orde; "but it's easy driving, and if that crew of his hasn't much to do perhaps he'll lay most of them off here at Redding."

Denning looked at his principal for a moment, then a slow grin overspread his face. Without comment he turned back to camp, and Orde took up his reins.

* * * * * * * *

"Oh, I'm so glad to get you back!" cried Carroll over and over again as she clung to him. "I don't live while you're away. And every drop of rain that patters on the roof chills my heart, because I think of it as chilling you. Dear heart, don't leave me again."

She shook her head at him slowly, a mysterious smile on her lips. Without explaining her thought she slipped from his knee and glided across to the tall golden harp, which had been brought from Monrovia. The light and diaphanous silk of her loose peignoir floated about her, defining the maturing grace of her figure. Abruptly she struck a great crashing chord.

Then, with an abandon of ecstasy, she plunged into one of those wild and sea blown, saga-like rhapsodies of the Hungarians, full of the wind in rigging, the storm in the pines, of shrieking, vast forces hurtling unchained through a resounding and infinite space.

"Oh, it's you, you, you!" she cried.

"What is that?" gasped Orde.

She ran to him.

"Oh, it's you, you, you!" she cried.

He held her closely. "Do you think it is good to get quite so nervous, sweetheart?" he asked gently then. "Remember"—

"Oh, I do! I do!" she broke in earnestly. "Every moment of my waking and sleeping hours I remember him. Always I keep his little soul before me as a light on a shrine. But tonight—oh, tonight, I could laugh and shout aloud like the people in the Bible, with clapping of hands!" She snuggled herself close to Orde with a little murmur of happiness. "I think of all the beautiful things," she whispered, "and of the noble things, and of the great things. He is going to be sturdy, like his father—a wonderful boy, a boy all of fire"—

"Like his mother," said Orde.

She smiled up at him. "I want him just like you, dear."

Chapter 25

THREE days later the jam of the drive reached the dam at Redding. After the rear had dropped down river from Redding Carroll and Orde returned to their deserted little box of a house at Monrovia.

Orde breathed deep of a new satisfaction in walking again the streets of this little sandy, sawdust paved, shantyfied town, with its yellow hills and its wide blue river and its glimpse of the lake far in the offing.

"Hanged if I know what's struck me," he mused. "Never experienced any remarkable joy before in getting back to this sort of truck."

Then, with a warm glow at the heart, the realization was brought to him. This was home, and over yonder under the shadow of the heaven pointing spire a slip of a girl was waiting for him.

The rest of the week Orde was absent up the river, superintending in a general way the latter progress of the drive.

At the booms everything was in readiness to receive the jam. The long swing arm shunting across the river channel was attached to its winch, which would operate it. When shut it would close the main channel and shunt into the booms the logs floating in the river. There, penned at last by the piles driven in a row and held together at the top by bolted timbers, they would lie quiet. Men armed with pike poles would then take up the work of distribution according to the brands stamped on the ends. Each brand had its own separate "sorting pens," the lower end leading again into the open river. From these each owner's property was rafted and towed to his private booms at his mill below.

Orde spent the day before the jam appeared in constructing what he called a "boomerang."

"Secret invention just yet," he explained to Newmark. "I'm going to hold up the drive in the main river until we have things bunched; then I'm going to throw a big crew down here by the swing. Heinzman anticipates, of course, that I'll run the entire drive into the booms and do all my sorting there. Naturally if I turn his logs loose into the river as fast as I run across them he will be able to pick them up one at a time, for he'll only get them occasionally. If I keep them until everything else is sorted only Heinzman's logs will remain, and as we have no right to hold logs we'll have to turn them loose through the lower sorting booms, where he can be ready to raft them. In that way he gets them all right without paying us a cent. See?"

"Yes, I see," said Newmark.

"Well," said Orde, with a laugh, "here is where I fool him. I'm going to rush the drive into the booms all at once, but I'm going to sort out Heinzman's logs at these openings near the entrance and turn them into the main channel."

"What good will that do?" asked Newmark skeptically. "He gets them sorted just the same, doesn't he?"

"The current's fairly strong," Orde pointed out, "and the river's almighty wide. When you spring seven or eight million feet on a man all at once and unexpected and he with no crew to handle them, he's going to keep almighty busy. And if he don't stop them this side his mill he'll have to raft and tow them back, and if he doesn't stop 'em this side the lake he may as well kiss them all goodby."

The boomerang worked like a charm. Orde, in personal charge, watched that through the different openings in his boomerang the "H" logs were shunted into the river. Shortly the channel was full of logs floating merrily away.

"I've got to go down and see how the Dutchman is making it," announced Orde.

He drove to Heinzmann's mill. There he found evidences of the wildest excitement. Boats plied in all directions. A tug darted back and forth. Constantly the number of floating logs augmented, however. Many had already gone by.

"If you think you're busy now," said Orde to himself, with a chuckle, "just wait until you begin to get logs. What's he doing with that tug?" thought he. "Oh, ho! He's stringing booms across the river to hold the whole outfit."

He laughed aloud and drove frantically back to the booms.

"He's shut down his mill," shouted Orde, "and he's got all that gang of highbankers out and every old rum blossom in Monrovia, and I bet if you say 'logs' to him he'd chase his tail in circles. I'm going to take Marsh and the Sprite and go to town. Old Heinzman," he added as an afterthought, "is stringing booms across the river obstructing navigation."

"Marsh," he called, "got up steam?"

There appeared a short, square man, eyes blue as the sky.

"Up in two minutes," he answered. "Harvey, fire her up!"

Captain Marsh guided his energetic charge among the logs floating in the stream with the marvelous second instinct of the expert tugboat man. Orde noted with satisfaction that many of the logs had found lodgment among the reeds and in the bayous and inlets. One at a time, and painfully, these would have to be salvaged.

Shortly Orde, standing by the wheel in the pilothouse, could see down the stretches of the river a crowd of men working, natlike.

"They've got 'em stopped," commented Orde. "Look at that gang working from boats!"

"What do you want me to do?" asked Captain Marsh.

"This is a navigable river, isn't it?" replied Orde. "Run through!"

CARE OF SHOWCASES.

How to Prevent Breakage and Clean the Plate Glass.

The position of a showcase has sometimes a great deal to do with breakage, and cases must always be set level or there is an uneven strain on some part of the case, which is liable to cause a break at any time, and when the case is not setting on a level foundation the doors will not close properly and tightly.

Particularly is this the case with the all glass showcase now so deservedly popular, although there is one style now made that is fastened together with patent corner clamps without holes in the glass that is practically unbreakable through this cause, as the corners permit of a certain amount of movement when the case is not level, but it is a general rule that all cases must set perfectly level.

Again, beware of the all glass case that is fastened together by metal bolts through holes in the glass, as if it is placed near a radiator or register it is almost sure to break through any sudden heat or cold owing to the unequal expansion of the glass, which brings the bolt in contact with it and precipitates a crack. Here again the corner clamp is better, as it allows a certain amount of movement, as stated before.

If a crack does happen in plate glass from whatever cause it is possible to prevent its spreading in some cases by cutting a small, short scratch with a glazier's diamond directly at right angles to the crack.

Glass should always be handled with care, and when shelves of plate glass are taken from a showcase to clean they should always be carried on edge and rested against a wall in the same manner.

To clean plate glass use the old familiar mixture of liquid ammonia, one ounce; alcohol, one ounce; whiting, one ounce, and water to make one pint. Rub on glass with a sponge, and when dry rub off and polish with a soft cloth or chamois.

STOPPING A MOTORCAR.

How to Do It Safely and Without Straining the Machine.

"Never do anything suddenly with an automobile," writes an experienced driver. "Only so can wear and tear on the car be minimized, not to mention accidents. Suppose you are confronted with the necessity for a sudden stop. Your impulse will be to jam down the clutch pedal, grip the emergency brake lever and clamp the wheels into cessation of their revolution.

"The motor, thus relieved of its load, will begin to race, the driving wheel will spin around with increasing velocity, and you are lucky if, especially on wet asphalt, your car does not skid around like a top, fan the earth and turn turtle with you underneath. The wear of this sort of stop on the tires should be a sufficient consideration for you to refrain from cultivating it.

"If, on the other hand, you first close the throttle, then throw out the clutch and apply the brake just hard enough to allow the wheels barely to revolve, your car will come to a safer, speedier stop without strain. The methods to accomplish this must, of course, be practically simultaneous, but they are no more difficult than those required for the wrong sort of stop. Once at rest, you open the throttle instantly and advance the spark if necessary to start the engine. The clutch can then be thrown in gradually when you wish to advance."—Outing Magazine.

CARAVAN BREADMAKING.

Afghans Use Cobblestones, While Turcomans Like Sand.

The bread of the Afghan caravan was cooked by heating small round cobblestones in the fire and then poking them out and wrapping dough an inch thick about them. The balls thus formed were again thrown into the fire, to be poked out again when cooked. The bread tasted well there in the desert, although in civilized communities the grit and ashes would have seemed unendurable.

After good fellowship had been established the Afghans actually sold us some flour, says a writer in the National Geographical Magazine. The camp where we used it a little later happened to be beside the sandy bed of a trickling salt stream, which was drinkable in winter, but absolutely unusable in summer, when evaporation is at its height and the salt is concentrated.

"See," said one of our Turcomans as we dismounted; "here is some sand. Tonight we can have some good bread."

When some dry twigs had been gathered he proceeded to smooth off a bit of the cleanest sand and built upon it a hot fire. When the sand was thoroughly hot he raked off most of the coals and smoothed the sand very neatly. Meanwhile one of the other men had made two large sheets of dough about three-quarters of an inch thick and eighteen inches in diameter. Between these he placed a layer of lumps of sheep's tail fat, making a huge round sandwich. This was now spread on the hot sand, coals mixed with sand were placed completely over it, and it was left to bake. Now and then an edge was uncovered, and a Turcoman smelled it appreciatively and rapped on it to see if it was yet cooked. When the top was thoroughly baked the bread was turned over and covered up again. It tasted even better than the Afghan bread after it was cooled a little and the sand and ashes had been whisked off with a girdle. The Turcomans are so accustomed to life in the sandy desert that they think it impossible to make the best kind of bread without sand, while the Afghans, who live in the stony mountains, think that cobblestones are a requisite.

THE ZANZIBARIS.

Dense Stupidity and Amusing Blunders of the Natives.

In the "Autobiography of Sir Henry M. Stanley" the author says of the colored natives of central Africa:

"Head as the majority of Zanzibaris were, some of them were fathearthlably and for the most unfortunately dense. One man who from his personal appearance might have been judged to be among the most intelligent was after thirty months' experience with his musket unable to understand how it was to be loaded. He never could remember whether he ought to drop the powder or the bullet into the musket first. Another time he was sent with a man to transport a company of men over a river to camp. After waiting an hour I strode to the bank of the river and found them paddling in opposite directions, each blaming the other for his stupidity and, being in a passion of excitement, unable to hear the advice of men across the river, who were bawling out to them how to manage their canoe.

"Another man was so ludicrously stupid that he generally was saved from punishment because his mistakes were so absurd. We were one day floating down the Kongo, and, it being nearly camping time, I bade him, as he happened to be bowman on the canoe, to stand by and seize the grass on the bank to arrest the boat when I should call out. In a little while we came to a likely place, and I cried, 'Hold hard, Khango!' 'Please God master,' he replied and forthwith sprang on the shore and, seizing the grass with both hands, while we, of course, were rapidly swept down river, leaving him alone and solitary on the bank. The boat's crew roared at the ridiculous sight, but nevertheless his stupidity cost the travel men a hard pull to ascend again; for not every place was available for a camp.

"He it was also who on an occasion, which we required the branch of a species of arbutus which overhung the river to be cut away to allow the canoes to be brought nearer to the bank for safety, actually went astride of the branch and charged away until he fell into the water with the branch and lost our ax. He had seated himself on the outer end of the branch."

TOOLED LEATHER WORK.

How to Make Useful and Inexpensive Articles From Calfskin.

Inexpensive and useful articles may be made from calfskin and tooled. A skin containing six square feet costs 50 cents at a sporting house. Note books, table mats, catch cases, hat bands, needlebooks, purses and glove cases can be made from it.

First make an exact copy on paper of the article you wish to make. Place leather on piece of marble or soapstone with pattern on top and trace all lines with a hard pencil. Then wet leather quite wet on wrong side with a sponge or soft cloth. Go over all lines on right side with a nut pick, pressing hard. Then with a nail set costing 10 cents and hammer bring out the design by tooling—merely placing nail set on leather and pounding with hammer. If initials are used tool all around, leaving letters plain. If leaves or flowers are used tool all around, leaving design plain, or vice versa. The veins in leaves may be put in with nut pick.

The articles may be stitched on sewing machine with buttonhole twist to match leather and leave edges raw.

How to Wash a Plume.

The advice given by one woman for washing a plume is as follows: Lay the plume in a suds made of good white soap and cold water and let it stand for two or three hours. Then put into hot water, where it should remain about twenty minutes. Then, with a piece of soft cloth or silk dipped in soapsuds, remove any dirt which may remain. Lay it on a clean towel and touch with a piece of cloth rolled up to restore the curl. When almost dry, shake until fluffy, place in tissue paper and put it in the warming oven of the stove to dry thoroughly. If necessary use the dull side of an ivory paper cutter in restoring the curl.

How to Make Nice Clothes Hangers.

Nice homemade clothes hangers can be made from ordinary wooden hoops cut any desired length. Cover them with a padding of cotton batting that has been sprinkled liberally with violet, orris root or any other sachet powder. The hanger should then be bound with narrow Dresden ribbon or slipped into a shirred ribbon case made to fit.

HOUSE PLANTS IN WINTER.

How to Make Them Thrive by Observing Simple Rules.

The best exposure for house plants in the winter is, as a general thing, a southern one. The next best is an eastern one. Some plants can be grown in western windows, but they never do as well as in the other exposures, chiefly because of the intense heat of the afternoon sun. If care is taken, however, to shade the glass during the hottest part of the day it is possible to grow plants well under these conditions.

A few plants do well in a north window. The lack of sunshine prevents the production of flowers. But many foliage plants thrive. They require much less water because evaporation, due to absence of sunshine, takes place in such a location more slowly. Give only the amount of water needed to keep the soil moist. More will cause a souring of the soil, a condition seldom met with when plants are fully exposed to sunshine. In a northern location the soil around the roots should be turned over at least once a week to allow the sun to reach it and, as it were, purify it. Some plants, like the geraniums and carnations, can hardly get too much sunshine.

Another thing plants require is ventilation. A florist always has the finest system of ventilation in his houses. Of course it is hard to get things down to such due points in a private house, but we can, by raising and lowering windows, frequently change the atmosphere to all life.

Another matter of importance in plant growing is watering. Showering is almost as necessary as root watering. The leaves of the plant are covered with pores, and the plant breathes through them. If these pores become clogged with dust and dirt the plant surely suffers. Showering, therefore, removes the dirt from the pores and, generally speaking, insures a healthy plant. Where a plant fails to get this moisture the leaves turn yellow and fall off, and the plant takes on a sickly appearance.

In the house during the winter it is a great benefit to plants to keep water evaporating on stoves, register or radiators in rooms where artificial heat is used. While sweeping or dusting the room indoors or the piazza outdoors it is well to cover plants with a light thin cloth. Another thing to remember is to remove all dying leaves as soon as they turn yellow; also cut off all flowers as soon as they commence to fade and never throw them down among the plants to decay. If a plant shows a tendency to grow tall and branchless cut it back at least one-third.

How to Purify Air In a Sickroom.

Put absorbent cotton in a pan and cover the cotton with sugar, then set the cotton on fire, and the smoke will be pleasant to the invalid and also leave a sweet odor in the room.

MRS. EMILY S. HART

Passed Away at Home of Daughter Saturday

One of the First Resorters—Charlevoix Summer Homes Association.

Mrs. Emily S. Hart passed away very suddenly Saturday, March 5, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. R. W. Kane. Deceased was well known years ago to the people of Charlevoix as one of the first of the resorters on the grounds now owned by the Charlevoix Summer Home Association. Her husband J. P. Hart, was a builder who put up a number of the cottages on that resort and himself was a cottage owner. Mr. Hart passed away about twelve years ago. Since that time Mrs. Hart has been residing a part of the time in Chicago and a part of the time in California, coming to Charlevoix and taking up her home with Mrs. Kane in August 1908.

The deceased was seventy-three years of age. To those who knew her, it is unnecessary to speak of the sterling and loving qualities of womanhood which endeared her to all who were fortunate enough to enjoy her acquaintance.

She leaves a family of three children, Mrs. R. W. Kane and A. L. Hart, residents of Charlevoix, and C. R. Hart of the Bradley Polytechnic Institute of Peoria, Ill.

Funeral services were held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kane, Monday afternoon at four o'clock, her many friends taking occasion to express their appreciation of her and sympathy with the family in their loss by an exceedingly liberal contribution of flowers with many messages of love, hope and sympathy accompanying them.

The body was taken for interment to Ionia, her former home, where her husband is buried.

Value of Good Roads to Farms.

It has been said that "good roads lead from good farms to good towns," and it seems a direct way of stating the fact. Wherever there are good roads leading into a town that town is invariably an active and up to date business community. Whenever good roads run through a farming region the farms are found well kept, the houses bright and in good repair, and the outbuildings show an air of snug comfort and prosperity.

MRS. PAMELIA BROCK

One of the Oldest Pioneers of Eveline Township

Died at Her Home Thursday Morning, March 10.

Mrs. Pamelia Brock, one of the oldest pioneers in this section, having resided here permanently for fifty years, died at her home in Eveline Thursday morning, after an illness of five weeks.

Pamelia Holland was born in Ontario in 1828, where she was married to Marshall Brock and came with her husband and three children to this country about fifty years ago and settled on a farm in Eveline township, where she has resided ever since. Mr. Brock died thirty years ago.

She was the mother of seven children, four of whom were born in Canada and three in this county, one of whom died in infancy in Canada and one son, U. W., who died in this county at the age of twenty.

The five which survive her are William H. of Eveline, James M. of Sacramento, California, Mrs. Charles Cobbentz of Eveline, Mrs. Joe Tuttle of Boyne City, and Hiram, who resides on the old homestead.

Mrs. Brock was a kind and faithful mother who did well her part in developing this region during her long residence in this county, and will be much missed by the neighbors among whom she has lived so long.

The funeral was held at the home Saturday, Rev. Mac H. Wallace of Detroit, officiating, burial at Brookside.

Important News

The New Tungsten Lamps which we are handling can be used in any position, up, down, or at an angle. The method of supporting the filament automatically takes care of the expansion and contraction. The filament cannot sag.

The small bulb enables the lamp to be used in all kinds of globes.

The life of the New Type Tungsten is from 800-1000 hours. The following table shows you the saving by their use. This table is based upon the ordinary cottage of 5 rooms with six 8 c. p. and ten 16 c. p. lamps burning two hours per day for thirty days.

Six eight c. p. of 32w each will consume eleven thousand five hundred and twenty watts per month. Ten sixteen c. p. lamps of 50 w. per lamp will consume 33,000 watts per month. Making a total of 45,120 w. costing 10 cents per thousand makes your bill $4.51 whereas by burning 6-25 w. Tungstens which consume 800 w. and 10-40 w consuming 24,000, making a total of 32,000 w. and your bill only amounting to $3.20. You not only have a saving of $1.31 per month but you are receiving more and better light.

To the consumers of current and prospective consumers, we shall be glad to prove these facts by giving you a practical demonstration.

ON LIFE'S THRESHOLD

Ray Clink's Struggle for Life is Over.

A Young Man Whose Loss is Felt All Over the County.

Ray, son of E. N. Clink, of East Jordan, passed away at the home of his parents, in that village, Saturday, after an illness of several months with tuberculosis, during which time he had made a brave fight against the dread disease.

Ray Clink was a young man who ranked among the best of Charlevoix county's young men and had just graduated from the State Normal and was preparing to take up further studies when stricken with the dread disease. A season was spent in the south west after which he returned home and, for a while some hopes of his recovery were felt, but soon passed away and he manfully awaited the end.

The funeral was held at East Jordan yesterday, the county officials and members of the bar generally attending as a mark of their heartfelt sympathy with the parents and sister in the loss of their only son and brother, just as he was entering upon a life which promised to be one of much good to his fellow men.

MONTHLY EXCURSIONS

Will Be Run by Railroads to This Section

For Home-seekers Who are Attracted by Its Advantages.

Many of the real estate dealers in Western Michigan are making plans for the reception of the home seekers who will invade the territory with the going into effect of the excursion rates. The railroads have arranged for excursions for two Tuesdays for each month for the entire spring, summer and fall seasons. The exact dates are as follows:

March	15 and 29
April	5 and 19
May	3 and 17
June	7 and 21
July	5 and 19
August	2 and 16
September	6 and 20
October	4 and 18
November	1 and 15
December	6 and 20

It is the duty of all interested in the advancement of the region, to see that the strangers that come on these excursions, are not only favorably impressed with the many opportunities that we have to offer, but that each and every person showing a disposition to invest and cast his lot with us, gets a "square deal."

We have nothing to gain in getting people located on lands that they will have to abandon because of lack of the special knowledge necessary to make said lands produce the wealth so essential to success. It should be the aim of each of us, to see that every new comer is so located that he cannot under fair conditions, do aught but prosper.

If we but remember, in receiving the prospectors now headed this way, that general prosperity is the sum total of a large amount of individual prosperity, and if we strive to increase the quantity of individual prosperity, we will not get far astray.

COUNTY OFFICERS AND CIRCUIT JUDGE

Question of Their Direct Nomination by the People

WILL BE SUBMITTED APRIL FOURTH

Slowly More Concessions are Being Made to Popular Demand

Changes in Primary Election Law Made by Last Legislature—Enrollment Must be Made at Spring Election.

At the election to be held in April the question of the adoption of the direct nomination system, for the nomination of candidates for all political parties for circuit judge and county officers will be submitted to the voters of Charlevoix county, in accordance with the new primary law enacted by the last legislature.

The changes in the new law, from the former law, are briefly as follows:

Direct nominations are made mandatory, on all parties, for governor, lieutenant-governor, United States senator, member of congress, state senator and representative in state legislature.

Counties and judicial circuits not now nominating under the primary system must vote upon the proposition in April, and, when the system is adopted, it becomes mandatory upon all political parties. The date of the primary is changed from the first Tuesday in September to the first Tuesday after the first Monday.

Party enrollment must be made on the day of the April election.

Restrictions are placed upon the advertising which can be done by candidates for public offices.

Delegates to county conventions are chosen by the direct method.

Assuming that everybody, whether a friend of the primary system or not, realizes the fact that the primary system has now come to stay and is fast becoming as universal as the Australian ballot, we believe that all opposition should cease and all unite together to perfect a system that will give the people an opportunity to name their choice at the least possible expense.

The history of the primary legislation in Michigan has been a constant attempt by the advocates of the old discredited convention system, to formulate a law which would be so cumbersome, so expensive, that the people would become disgusted and again place the nomination of their candidates in the hands of the bosses. In this endeavor they have failed and with each succeeding legislature more concessions have been make to the people, although grudgingly.

We believe that the people will never give up the opportunity which they have gained but if they wish to show their appreciation of the efforts which have been made to place the naming of public officials in their hands, they should not stay at home next April but should go to the polls, enroll, and next September go to the primary and vote for the men of their choice.

Another thing which the direct system does is being demonstrated every day by the different candidates, who are appealing direct to the people for support and not to the different men, who under the old system, have been able to deliver the votes of a county or township at the convention.

The COURIER believes the direct nomination system, or any other system that brings the choice of our public officials nearer and makes them responsible to the people direct, is always right and shall constantly advocate the adoption of the system both for county officers and circuit judge.

While we have our choice of the different candidates, who will go before the people and shall announce, at the proper time, who they are and why we support them, we shall give everybody an opportunity to state why they ask the votes of their fellow citizens.

We again urge everybody to enroll next April and place themselves in position to take part in the September primary.

FREE IF IT FAILS

Your Money Back if You are Not Satisfied With the Medicine we Recommend.

We are so positive that our remedy will permanently relieve constipation, no matter how chronic it may be, that we offer to furnish the medicine at our expense should it fail to produce satisfactory results.

It is worse than useless to attempt to cure constipation with cathartic drugs. Laxatives or cathartics do much harm. They cause a reaction, irritate and weaken the bowels and tend to make constipation more chronic. Besides, their use becomes a habit that is dangerous.

Constipation is caused by a weakness of the nerves and muscles of the large intestine or descending colon. To expect permanent relief you must therefore tone up and strengthen these organs and restore them to healthier activity.

The discovery of the active principle of our remedy involved the labor of the world's greatest research chemists. As an active agent it possesses the valuable qualities of the best known intestinal tonics as well as being particularly pleasant and prompt in its results.

We want you to try Rexall Orderlies on our recommendation. They are exceedingly pleasant to take, being eaten like candy, and are ideal for children, delicate persons and old folks, as well as for the robust. They act directly on the nerves and muscles of the bowels. They apparently have a neutral action on other associate organs or glands. They do not purge, cause excessive looseness nor create any inconvenience whatever. They may be taken at any time, day or night. They will positively relieve chronic or habitual constipation, if not of surgical variety, and the myriads of associate or dependent chronic ailments, if taken with regularity for a reasonable length of time. They come in two sizes of packages, 12 tablets, 10 cents; 36 tablets, 25 cents. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store.—The Rexall Store.—The Ivy Drug Store, A. B. SHOEMAN AND GROCER listened in the plaint of the lobster, "You have baked me too brown, I must sugar my hair," without being able to improve on the culinary failure. Many another Alice-in-the Kitchen has almost expected her failures to reproach her when she herself has come to the realization that her own lack of foresight caused the catastrophes in the baking.

There are two essentials in the art of baking—a good oven and good material. The oven must be at right temperature for the baking and the material must be like Caesar's wife—"above reproach." Nearly every woman thinks she is a born cook and she surely is if she knows enough to get the oven right and to choose right proportions and right ingredients for her work.

The woman who aspires to be a successful cook should be familiar with the best materials as a workman is with his tools or an artist with his colors. She should know that the absolute essential to good baking is good baking powder. Second-class baking powder will bring second-class results. First-class baking powder insures perfect bakings. That's the secret. Use only the best baking powder. That does not mean the most expensive, for the best in the market is Calumet, which sells at a moderate price. Calumet baking powder received the Highest Award at the World's Pure Food Exposition. 11-t-f

"I'm in hard luck," sighed the steel rail.

"Look at me! I get nothing from morning till night but hot air," groaned the pumping engine.

"I'm always in hot water," sighed the boiler.

"Consider my plight," cried the macadam road, "invariably walked over and trodden under foot."

"I'm used to it, for I'm always up against it," philosophically remarked the wall paper.

"You're none of you as badly off as I am," said the furnace, "for, no matter where I go, I'm generally fired."—Baltimore American.

The Editor Won.

A London paper described a children's excursion as a "long white scream of joy" and was called to account by a correspondent, who said that a scream could be long, but not white, whereupon the editor justified himself by urging that "a hue is often associated with a cry."

CHAPTER XV—Continued.

The tug headed straight for the slender line of booms stretching quite across the river.

Orde looked at his watch.

"We'll be late for the mail unless we hurry," said he.

March rang the engine room bell. The water churned white behind.

"Vat you do? Stop!" cried Heinzman from a boat.

"You're obstructing navigation!" yelled Orde. "I've got to go to town to buy a postage stamp."

The prow of the tug, accurately aimed by Marsh, hit square in the junction of two of the booms. There ensued a moment of strain; then the links snapped, and the Sprite plunged joyously through the opening. The booms, swept aside by the current, floated to either shore. The river was open.

"Slow down, Marsh," said Orde. "Let's see the show."

Up river all the small boats gathered in a line, connected one to the other by a rope. The line passed over to them the cable attached to the boom. Evidently the combined efforts of the rowboats were counted on to hold the half boom across the current while the tug brought out the other half. When the tug dropped the cable Orde laughed.

"Nobody but a Dutchman would have thought of that!" he cried. "Now for the fun!"

Immediately the weight fell on the small boats they were dragged irresistibly backward. Marsh lowered his telescope, the tears of laughter streaming down his face.

"They'll have to have two tugs before they can close the break that way," commented Orde.

"Sure thing," replied Captain Marsh.

But at that moment a black smoke rolled up over the marshes, and shortly around the bend from above came the Lucy Belle.

The Lucy Belle was the main excuse for calling the river navigable. In appearance she was two storied, with twin smokestacks, an iron Indian on her top and a "splitter behind" paddle wheel.

"There comes his help," said Orde.

Sure enough, the Lucy Belle stopped. After a short conference she steamed clumsily over to get hold of one end of the booms. The tug took the other. In time and by dint of much pushing, some collisions and several attempts the ends of the booms were united.

By this time, however, nearly all the logs had escaped. The tug, towing a string of rowboats, set out in pursuit. The Lucy Belle turned in toward the tug.

"She's going to speak us," marveled Orde.

"Tug ahoy!" bellowed a red faced individual from the upper deck. He was dressed in blue and brass buttons and was liberally festooned with gold braid and embroidered anchors.

"Hello there, commodore! What is it?" replied Marsh.

"They want a tug up there at Heinzman's. Can you go?"

"Sure!" cried Marsh, choking.

The Lucy Belle sheered off magnificently.

"What do you think of that?" Marsh asked Orde.

"Head upstream again."

Heinzman saw the Sprite coming and rowed out frantically, splashing at every stroke and yelling with every breath.

"Don't you go through there! Vait a minute? Stop, I tell you!"

"Hold on," said Orde to Marsh.

Heinzman rowed alongside.

"Vat you do?" he demanded.

"Vat you do?" he demanded.

"I forgot the money to buy my stamp with," said Orde sweetly. "I'm going back to get it."

"Not through my booms!"

"Mr. Heinzman," said Orde severely, "you are obstructing a navigable stream. I am doing business, and I cannot be interfered with."

"Dam my logs!"

"I have nothing to do with your logs. You are driving your own logs," Orde reminded him.

Heinzman vituperated.

"Go ahead, Marsh!" said Orde.

For a second time the chains were snapped. The severed ends of the booms swung back toward either shore. Between them floated a rowboat. In the rowboat gesticulated a pudgy man. The river was well sprinkled with logs. Evidently the sorting was going on well.

"May as well go back to the works," said Orde. "He won't string them together again today, not if he waits for that tug he sent Simpson for."

Orde detailed to an appreciative audience the happenings below.

"Why, he hain't sorted out more'n a million feet of his logs," cried Rollway Charlie. "He hain't seen no logs yet."

They turned with new enthusiasm to the work of sh logs into the channel.

A stableman picked his way out over the booms with a message for Orde.

"Mr. Heinzman's ashore and wants to see you," said he.

Orde found the mill man pacing restlessly up and down before a steaming pair of horses. Newmark, perched on a stump, was surveying him sardonically.

"Here you poth are!" burst out Heinzman. "I must not lose my logs! Vat is your proposition?"

Newmark broke in quickly.

"I've told Mr. Heinzman," said he, "that we would sort and deliver the rest of his logs for $2 a thousand."

"That will be about it," agreed Orde.

"But," exploded Heinzman, "that is as much as you agreed to drive and delifer my whole cut!"

"Precisely," said Newmark.

"I put I haf all the eggsperience of driving the logs myself. Why should I pay you for doing what I haf already paid to haf done?"

Orde chuckled.

"Heinzman," said he, "we aren't forced to bother with your logs, and you're lucky to get out so easy. If I turn your whole drive into the river you'll lose more than half of it outright, and it'll cost you a heap to salvage the rest. And, what's more, I'll turn 'em in before you can get hold of a pile driver. I'll sort night and day," he bluffed, "and by tomorrow morning you won't have a stick of timber above my booms." He laughed again. "You want to get down to business almighty sudden."

When finally Heinzman had driven sadly away and the whole drive, "H" logs included, was pouring into the main boom Orde stretched his arms over his head in a luxury of satisfaction.

"That just about settles that campaign," he said to Newmark.

"Oh, no, it doesn't!" replied the latter decidedly.

"Why?" asked Orde, surprised. "You don't imagine he'll do anything more?"

"No, but I will," said Newmark.

Early in the fall the baby was born. It proved to be a boy. Orde, nervous as a cat after the ordeal of doing nothing, tiptoed into the darkened room. He found his wife weak and pale, her dark hair framing her face, a new look of rapt inner contemplation rendering even more mysterious her always fathomless eyes. She held her lips to him. He kissed them.

Grandma Orde brought the newcomer in for Orde's inspection. He looked gravely down on the puckered, discolored bit of humanity with a faint uneasiness.

"Is—do you think—that is". He hesitated. "Does the doctor say he's going to be all right?"

"All right!" cried Grandma Orde indignantly. "I'd like to know if he isn't all right now! What in the world do you expect of a newborn baby?"

But Carroll was laughing softly to herself on the bed. She held out her arms for the baby and cuddled it close to her breast.

"He's a little darling," she crooned, "and he's going to grow up big and strong, just like his daddy." She put her cheek against the sleeping babe's and looked up sidewise at the two standing above her. "But I know how you feel," she said to her husband. "When they first showed him to me I thought he looked like a peanut a thousand years old."

Chapter 26

THE first season of the Boom company was most successful. Its prospects for the future were bright. The drive had been delivered to its various owners at a price below what it had cost them severally and without the necessary attendant bother. Therefore the loggers were only too willing to renew their contracts for another year. This did not satisfy Newmark, however.

"What we want," he told Orde, "is a charter giving us exclusive rights on the river and authorizing us to ask toll. I'm going to try and get one out of the legislature."

He departed for Lansing as soon as the assembly opened and almost immediately became lost in one of those fierce struggles of politics not less bitter because concealed. Heinzman was already on the ground. Newmark had the shadow of right on his side, for he applied for the charter on the heels of the river improvements already put in by his firm. Heinzman wanted the improvements—already existing—condemned and sold as a public utility to the highest bidder. He offered further guarantees as to future improvements in addition were other and more potent arguments proffered behind closed doors. Many causes resolved themselves into a bald question of cash. Others demanded diplomacy. Jobs, fat contracts, business favors, influence, were all flung out freely, broad as absolute as though stamped with the dollar mark. Newspapers all over the state were pressed into service. Among these delicate and complicated cross currents Newmark moved silent, cold, secret. He seemed to understand them, to play with them, to manipulate them as elements of the game.

The fight endured through most of the first half of the session. At the last, however, the bill passed the board. The company had its charter.

"It's cost us plenty, anyway," Orde said when the charter bill became a law. "The proposition's got a load on it. It will take us a long time to get out of debt. The river driving won't pay quite so big as we thought it would," he concluded, with a rueful little laugh.

"Newmark & Orde means something to those fellows now."

"It will pay plenty well enough," replied Newmark decidedly, "and it gives us a vantage point to work from. You don't suppose we are going to quit at river driving, do you? We want to look around for some timber of our own. There's where the big money is. And perhaps we can buy a schooner or two and go into the carrying trade. Newmark & Orde means something to these fellows now."

Chapter 27

IN the course of the next eight years Newmark & Orde floated high on that flood of apparent prosperity that attends a business well conceived and passably well managed. The Boom and Driving company made money, of course, for with the margin of 50 per cent or thereabouts necessitated by the temporary value of the improvements good years could hardly fail to bring good returns. This, it will be remembered, was a stock company. With the profits from that business the two men embarked on a separate copartnership.

Orde lived at ease in a new house of some size, surrounded by grounds. He kept two servants. A blooded team of horses drew the successor to the original buckboard. Newmark owned a sail yacht of five or six tons, in which, quite solitary, he took his only pleasure. Both were considered men of substance and property, as indeed they were.

Immediately after the granting of the charter to drive the river the partners had offered them an opportunity of acquiring about 30,000,000 feet of timber remaining from Morrison & Daly's original holdings. Orde finally completed the purchase on long time notes. Below the booms they erected a mill. The following winter Orde spent in the woods. By spring he had banked about 40,000,000 feet.

At the end of the fifth year the opportunity came to get possession of two lake schooners. Orde at once suggested the contract for a steam barge. Towing was then in its infancy. Orde thought that a steam barge could be built powerful enough not only to carry its own hold and deck loads, but to tow after it the two schooners. Newmark agreed with him. Thus the firm went into the carrying trade. The most important acquisition was that of the northern peninsula timber. Most operators called the white pine along and back from the river inexhaustible. But Orde saw the time not far distant when the world would be compelled to look elsewhere for its lumber, and he turned his eyes to the almost unknown north. After a long investigation he purchased 300,000,000 feet. This was to be paid for mostly by the firm's notes, secured by its other property.

To Carroll, Orde was always the same big, hearty, whole souled boy she had first learned to love. She had all his confidence.

"I guess he'll get what's coming to him."

Bobby had turned out a sturdy, honest little fellow, with more than a streak of his mother's charm and intuition.

"I want to give him all the chance there is," Orde explained to Carroll. "A boy ought to start where his father left off and not have to do the same thing all over again."

"Why don't you let him continue your business?" smiled Carroll.

"By the time Bobby's grown up this business will all be closed out," replied Orde seriously.

FIRE AT EAST JORDAN

Completely Destroyed Hotel Ericks Monday Morning

Loss Eight Thousand - Insurance Only Two Thousand Dollars.

At 4:30 Monday morning fire completely destroyed the Hotel Ericks at East Jordan. It started from the furnace of the house and got well under way before it was discovered. The guests were hurriedly gotten out of the building and some of the contents were saved but the fire raged so fiercely that a good portion of the furniture was burned. Fortunately the wind was in the north-west otherwise the damage would have been much greater as other business places would very likely succumbed to the flames.

The loss is estimated at $8,000 with only $2,000 insurance.

This is the second time that the building has been completely destroyed by fire.

In a barn in the rear of the hotel a large keg of dynamite was stored which, luckily, was removed before it was reached by the flames.

THEATRICAL

"Slaves of the Orient" is not a cheap printed play that anyone can buy for 25c. It is a Royalty full owned and produced by the Maud Henderson Stock Company, from whom Mrs. Jarvis obtained a copy at a big expense. This play is in manuscript only and has never been published, so undoubtedly you will never have the opportunity of seeing it again, as the company who play it travel in the west exclusively. The wardrobe is pretty and rich, songs, catchy and lots of them and the plot is good and very interesting. Come out and see for yourself. March 29th at the Charlevoix theater.

"The Man on the Box" was played at the Charlevoix theater Tuesday evening to a good house by one of the strongest and evenly balanced companys ever before the citizens of this city. The play is clean and full of good laughs throughout.

ORIGIN OF THE SPLIT LOG.

Novel Manner In Which Farmer Devised Scheme For Dragging Roads.

A few years ago a Missouri farmer named King became disgusted, as many a farmer has been before and since that time, with the condition of the highway between his farm and the neighboring village. He studied the situation and one day devised a rude contrivance to smooth the rough places and round up the surface from the ditch to the center so as to drain off the water.

It was a simple affair, made of a log split into two equal parts, a few braces between them, and a chain by which the horses hauled the drag with him upon it. He tried it after a rain when the road was soft, and it worked so well that his fame and the fame of the improved road spread through the neighborhood and thence far and wide.

That was the modest beginning, and now the split log drag, which any farmer or road commissioner can make in a few hours, is revolutionizing the methods of maintaining dirt roads—methods which have always been notoriously expensive and ineffective. The drag was not patented, and its inventor, with nothing to sell and only as a good roads enthusiast, has toured the country telling gatherings of farmers, road commissioners and local officials the marvelous results both in immediate improvement and in the subsequent cheapness of maintenance accomplished in the middle west, where the drag is now in general use. Indeed, in one state, Iowa, its use on all country roads is now required by legislative enactment.

The great value of good roads to the agricultural interests of the country is appreciated everywhere. A comparatively small mileage of the roads can be surfaced with crushed stone or gravel, and in the cheap and effective maintenance of the prevailing dirt roads the device, primitive in appearance, made from a split log and backed by the energy of an intelligent western farmer, promises to be a most important agent.

PLEA FOR GOOD ROADS.

Pennsylvania Congressman Strongly Urges Betterment of Our Highways.

In a speech made during the celebration of the surrender of Cornwallis Congressman J. Hampton Moore pleaded strongly for the betterment of roads throughout the country. He said: With good roads and improved waterways in the United States the Revolutionary war could not have lasted eight years. General Washington, he said, had insisted that free and easy commercial intercourse between the Atlantic seaboard and "the amazing territory to the westward of us" was "the best if not the only cement" that could bind the colonial states upon a permanent basis.

Washington and his compatriots, he pointed out, counted upon international trade to assist in building up the colonies and to populate and develop the vast country over which the grasp of England had been released.

"Commerce and labor, capital and industry demand that the waterways of the United States, its harbors and approaches be developed now, even as Washington and his compeers hoped for their development," he said.

"It is not that the railroad is failing to give the best it can afford. It is not that marvelous benefits, uniting states and sections, oceans, lakes and gulfs, have not ensued since the iron horse began its civilization of the wilderness. It is simply that the population of the country has grown more rapidly in proportion than has the ability of the railroad to comply with the requirements of modern transportation."

ROCKEFELLER TO MEND ROAD

He Will Put Down a Mile of Model Pavement Near Tarrytown, N. Y.

William Rockefeller, it was announced recently, will spend $50,000 to repair Broadway from the North Tarrytown (N. Y.) village line to the south line of Briarcliff. The road in front of Mr. Rockefeller's estate has been in bad condition all summer. Mr. Rockefeller rides back and forth to his office in New York every day in his automobile and has been greatly inconvenienced by the condition of the road.

The road to be repaired is more than a mile long. It is proposed to build a roadway thirty-three feet wide between gutters, and the central part to a width of twenty feet will be bricked with pavement blocks. On each hill a special block will be used. Mr. Rockefeller thinks this road will afford a model that will be followed by town authorities who are looking for a road to stand up under the automobile traffic. Mr. Rockefeller was the first person in the county to apply oil to roads, and he is the first to try this kind of automobile road there.

GOOD GYPSUM ROAD.

Successful Experiments With the Mineral Made by Kansas Experts.

W. S. Gearhart, state highway engineer of Kansas, who recently returned from an inspection tour through the southwestern part of that state, says the county commissioners in that part of the state believe in permanent roads and permanent bridges. Mr. Gearhart is well pleased with the results of the experiment in road building through the sand hills near Garden City.

"A little more than a year ago," he said, "the commercial club and the county commissioners, requested the office of public roads to send a man out to investigate possibilities of improving this road. Mr. Spoon, the sand clay expert, made them a visit and found that there were large deposits of gypsum all along the road. Tests were made on the gypsum, showing that it would make a good binder for the sand. The people decided to construct 700 feet of road under the direction of Mr. Spoon, and it was so satisfactory that they have now finished six miles of road at a total cost of $3,500. The 700 feet constructed first is smoother now than the remainder because the sand and gypsum were thoroughly mixed by plowing, disking and harrowing. The remainder was constructed by placing six inches of gypsum on the sand for a width of twelve feet and then a few inches of sand were placed on top of this and left for the traffic to do the mixing.

"It requires about two years to get a road in first class condition when constructed in this manner, but it is much cheaper than the other construction. Hot, dry weather is the worst enemy of this type of road, but despite the drought it is now in excellent condition and compares very favorably with the best macadam roads. The surface is hard and smooth and shows no signs of wear.

"The only complaint any one has to make is that the road is so smooth that locks must be placed on the wagons so that they can be safely taken down the hills. Some still refuse to get a lock and in going down drive with one wheel out in the sand and the other on the hard road. One year ago the sand on the road was so bad that people living ten miles south of Garden City, just beyond the hills, hauled their grain forty miles south to a railroad station, while at present grain and produce are being hauled twenty-eight miles north to Garden City.

"It is a place to go to be 'shown' if one has any doubt in his mind about the possibility of successfully constructing a sand, gypsum or clay road."

ROAD REPAIRER ENJOINED.

Physician Who Tried to Improve Highway Served With Injunction.

Widespread interest has been created in good roads circles in the case of Dr. Donald McCaskey of Witmer, Pa., who has been restrained from making further improvements to the Witmer road, a much traveled thoroughfare of East Lampeter township.

The physician, after failing to get the road supervisors of his local township to fix a dangerous and unkept half mile of yellow clay roadway, in desperation and at his own expense began to make repairs to the road himself. The doctor built King road drags and hired horses from farmers throughout the community who would rent them, and, not being able to induce anybody to repair the road for him, the physician drove the team and rode the drag himself. Occasionally a small boy was taken along to stand on the drag for ballast.

After fifteen hours of strenuous labor distributed over a period of six to eight weeks after each rain the neglected byroad was transformed into a substantial highway. All that was used was the simple wooden instrument termed the split log drag, which can be made by any farmer out of a log or a few boards.

The physician's efforts worked such a transformation in the minds of the unprogressive inhabitants of his community that the road drag met with popular favor, and the road officials began to be critically censured for their alleged indisposition to fulfill the duties of their official office.

They promptly secured an injunction restraining the physician from doing any more work of the kind, alleging that he had done this work "to the injury of the road in fines and to the inconvenience of the traveling public." The case is still before the courts.

Good Roads as Memorials.

W. W. Mitchell, one of the men of means at Cadillac, Mich., has offered a bonus, said to be as much as $500, for each mile of good road constructed in Wexford county in the next three years. Presumably one of the principal highways leading into the county seat will be known as the Mitchell road. Whether it is or not, the said given in the creation of a county system of improved highways will cause Mr. Mitchell to be held in grateful remembrance by future users of the roads.

TOOTH CLEANING ADVICE.

How to Prevent the Accumulation of Tartar With Little Trouble.

Thoroughly cleansing the teeth once a month will do much to prevent the accumulation of tartar and keep them white and sound. For this purpose powdered pumice should be placed on every washstand, with the definite knowledge of the harm it can do if used too often, for applied frequently it will wear away the enamel. There is absolutely no danger of this, however, if it is not put on oftener than once a month.

To give this treatment properly a wooden stick like that used on the nails is necessary, and 5 cents' worth of pumice, powdered, is, of course, an essential. A bit of absorbent cotton improves the application, and a few drops of lemon juice are better than water.

That the work may be done to best advantage a person should stand before a mirror. The cotton, a mere wisp, must be twisted about the end of the stick, which is then dipped into the lemon juice. From that it is stuck into the pumice and rubbed directly upon the teeth.

It is useless to rub the centers of the teeth, for, almost without exception, they are white. It is on the edges, the sides and the tops at the gums and next to the other teeth that tartar and discolorations accumulate, and so it is these places that must be whitened. The stick, constantly put into lemon juice and pumice, should be confined to these regions as near the gums as can be without loosening the flesh. It must be understood that if this cleansing is done carelessly the gums will be loosened from their places and a diseased condition result.

When all the teeth have been rubbed in this way a careful rinsing must be given the mouth, as the teeth should not be brushed immediately. Rather should a weak solution of lukewarm be used, for lime counteracts the effect of acid. When all the grains are removed a soft brush may be applied, taking care that all cracks between the teeth are cleansed.

Nothing will do more to prevent the accumulation of tartar than the continued use of lime or soda water. The latter may be mixed as required a teaspoonful of the bicarbonate to half a glass of water. After brushing the teeth at night the mouth must be rinsed with either of the preparations counteracting the effect of acid juices upon the enamel. It may be used also in the morning.

BABY'S OUTFIT BOX.

How to Make a Pretty Receptacle For the Infant's Clothes.

In order to make a baby's box get a clean, strong wooden box from the grocer. If possible one with a hinged top, or put the top on with two small hinges. The box should be about three feet long, two feet wide and two feet deep. Line it with unbleached muslin first, then with a pretty flowered denim. The inside of the lid should first be covered with muslin, then with denim, and a strip eight inches wide may be put on to form pockets to hold the articles of the baby. The outside of the box may be covered with denim or matting.

If you cover it with denim pad the top of the box well and it will make a comfortable seat. Fasten the covering on with brass headed tacks and get two brass handles for the ends of the box. The baby's slips may be kept in the box, its basket and other things. A strawberry crate makes a pretty box for holding a baby's outfit. Take a smooth new crate, paint it white or pale blue and line it inside with either blue gingham or white cambric. The lid of this may be finished inside with pockets and cushions outside. This box will not gather as much dust as the other one described and for that reason may be preferred.

How to Make a Hanging Bookshelf.

To make a hanging bookshelf cut three boards two inches wide and two feet long. Bore a hole in each corner of the three boards, also in center ends, size of the cord which is to pass through them. Use eight yards of cord. To put the shelves together pass the cord through the holes and tie a good knot under each hole so that the knot will not slip through. Get the knots in just the right places to have the shelves hang even. Begin tying at bottom shelf and go up and around. The shelves are nice if stained with mahogany or cherry color. After staining has dried varnish.

How to Keep Fruit Cake Moist.

To keep a fruit cake moist till the time of the cake with brandy and cover the entire cake with paraffin paper. If the cake has not been leaked in a cork's head moist the liquor can be poured over the surface before the oiled paper is put on. When there is sign of drying out more of the brandy can be added from time to time. This treatment actually makes a fruit cake better at the end of a year than when first baked. To depend upon time alone for improved flavor means certain disappointment.

How to Train the Eyebrows.

Eyebrows may be trained more readily than is generally thought. If thin and scrawny, make it a matter of routine to rub olive oil into them thoroughly each night. Persistence is the price of success. If the hairs of the eyebrows do not lie smooth, gentle brushing with the use of sweet oil will soon coax them into order.

How to Clean Hairbrushes.

To clean hairbrushes, put a table spoonful of ammonia into a basin of tepid water and dip the brushes down into it until they are clean. Dry with the bristles down, and they will be like new.

Neighborhood Notes

Careful examination into the clearing of Western Michigan wild land, places the cost of the clearing at $25 an acre. The items making up this amount are utout as follows: Cost per acre of clearing land of trees and brush $7; cost of pulling stumps, $8; cost of disposing of stumps $10.

H. F. Baker returned Sunday morning, from his trip to Lansing, Saginaw, Bay City and other points visited in connection with his candidacy for Speaker of the next House of Representatives. When asked about the outlook Mr. Baker said, "It's a cinch that I've landed the Speakership. Colin P. Campbell claims he has 72 votes pledged for him but if that be true there will be at least 130 members in the next house, for I know what 50 or 60 of the members intend to do in the matter." Mr. Baker further said, "If I am elected speaker of the next House of Representatives, as I fully expect to be, I have no chums to represent there and will not find it necessary to do violence to the constitution or injustice to my friends and supporters in order to carry out the wishes of those who send me to the legislature."—Cheboygan Tribune.

Naming the Rural Highways.

The Garden City Telegram is advocating a fine project in urging that the country roads in Kansas should be given appropriate and distinctive names.

This road naming suggestion came, the Telegram believes, originally from these columns, though it is by no means new outside of Kansas. The east, foreign countries, California and other regions have all gone into this excellent course of action in the past.

There is every reason for naming roads. The convenience to travelers, the definiteness of location when directing persons, the pride in having country homes designated as city homes are with respect to locality and the general good sense of the movement, should appeal to every one.

By STEWART EDWARD WHITE

Three years after the conversation last mentioned, which would have made Bobby just eight, Orde came home on a summer evening, his face alight with satisfaction.

He believed he had found the opportunity, twenty years distant, for which he had been looking so long.

"What we want is a charter."

Orde and his wife sat together on the top step. He slipped his arm about her. They breathed deep of the happiness that filled their lives. Two shadowy figures defined themselves approaching up the concrete walk.

"Hello!" called Orde.

"Hello!" a voice responded.

"Taylor and Clara," said Orde to Carroll, with satisfaction, "just the man I wanted to see." The lawyer and his wife mounted the steps.

Clara Taylor stopped short and considered Orde for a moment.

"Let us away," she said seriously to Carroll. "My prophetic soul tells me they are going to talk business, and if any more business is talked in my presence I shall expire. Come, Carroll; let's wander down the street and see Mina Heinzman."

The two sauntered away.

"Look here, Taylor," broke in Orde abruptly; "you told me the other day you had fifteen or twenty thousand you wanted to place somewhere."

"Yes," replied Taylor.

"Well, I believe I have just the proposition."

"What is it?"

"California pine," replied Orde.

"California pine," repeated Taylor. "California's a long way off, and there is no market, is there?"

"It's cheap," replied Orde succinctly. "I don't say it will be good for immediate returns, but in twenty or thirty years it ought to pay big on a small investment made now."

Taylor laughed.

"Laugh all you please," rejoined Orde, "but I tell you Michigan and Wisconsin pine is doomed. Twenty or thirty years from now there won't be any white pine for sale."

"Nonsense!" objected Taylor. "You're talking wild."

"All right," said Orde quietly. "Well, what do you think of Indiana as a good field for timber investment?"

"Indiana!" cried Taylor, amazed. "Why, there's no timber there; it's a prairie."

"The big things are for the fellow who can see far enough ahead."

"There used to be. And all the southern Michigan farm belt was timbered, and around here. We have our stumps to show for it, but there are no evidences at all farther south. You take your map and see how much area has been cut already. That'll open your eyes. And, remember, all that has been done by crude methods. The demand increases as the country grows and methods improve. It would not surprise me if some day thirty or forty millions would constitute an average cut."

"Why is it that no one"—

"Because," Orde cut him short, "the big things are for the fellow who can see far enough ahead."

"What kind of a proposition have you?" asked Taylor after a pause.

"I can get 10,000 acres at an average price of $8 an acre," replied Orde, "about 400,000,000 feet in timber."

"That's about 20 cents a thousand."

Orde nodded.

"And of course you couldn't operate for twenty or thirty years, and there's your interest on your money and taxes and the risk of fire and"—

"Of course," agreed Orde impatiently, "but you're getting your stumpage for 20 cents, and in thirty years it should be worth a dollar and a half." At the present time sugar pine such as Orde described would cost $3.50 to $4.

Taylor relapsed into thought.

"Look here, Orde," he broke out finally, "how old are you?"

"Thirty-eight. Why?"

"How much timber have you in Michigan?"

"About 10,000,000 that we've picked up on the river since the Daly purchase and 300,000,000 in the northern peninsula."

"Which will take you twenty years to cut and make you a million dollars. Then why this investment thirty years ahead?"

"It's for Bobby," explained Orde simply. "A man likes to have his son continue on in his business. I can't do it here, but there I can. It would take fifty years to cut that pine, and that will give Bobby a steady income and a steady business."

"Bobby will be well enough off my way. He won't have to go into business."

Orde's brow puckered.

"I know a man. Bobby is going to work. A man is not a success in life unless he does something, and Bobby is going to be a success. Why, Taylor," he chuckled, "the little rascal fills the wood box, for a cent a time, and that's all the pocket money he gets. He's saving now to buy a thousand dollar boat. I've agreed to pool in half. At his present rate of income I'm safe for about sixty years yet."

THE SKIPPER'S WHITE LIE.

What Happened at Night and What the Passenger Was Told.

It was a dirty night, to use a sailor's phrase, and the talk in one corner of the smoking room drifted to events at sea and the childlike faith that passengers repose in navigators.

Sahl the scientist who had been collecting specimens on a coral reef:

"I've often heard men and women say they felt so safe with Captain Sound-so, and I've wondered, too, whether their sense of security would still be retained if these favored travelers knew exactly what happened on shipboard during a voyage. For my own part, I have more confidence than ever in a captain of my acquaintance since I learned that he could tell a white lie when it was necessary to calm the fears of a nervous traveler. It so happened that one foggy night I was awakened by the sudden stoppage and reversal of the engines. I jumped out of my bunk, went on deck and was told by the second officer that we had had a narrow squeeze. It appeared that we had nearly run down a schooner as she silently crossed our bows and disappeared into the haze.

"Next morning a woman passenger who sat at the captain's table asked him whether the engines had been stopped and reversed, and he replied: 'Yes; we sometimes do this to test the engineer's watch and see if our machinery is in proper order. We do it at night so as to create no excitement.' Then he got the woman to describe what she had heard and asked her, 'Did you find much time between the stopping and reversing?'

"'No,' she replied.

"'Then,' said the skipper, 'that showed how well everything was working, did it not?'

"When I got the skipper's ear I told him confidentially that I didn't think the schooner's engines had worked as well as ours, and he remarked that it might have been worse. Whether he meant the lie or the incident I didn't inquire, but I suspect it wasn't the lie."—New York Post.

LAW OF GRAVITY VIOLATED.

Conditions Under Which Water Actually Flows Upward.

"Water seeks its level" is an expression heard so frequently as to be almost trite, and yet the law has its exceptions. There are conditions under which water actually flows upward and rises above its source. If a glass tube be dipped into water the column inside will be above the level of the surrounding surface. Moreover, if a tube of half the diameter be substituted the column doubles its height. The water creeps along the inside of the tube, owing to the adhesion, and forms a cup shaped depression at the top.

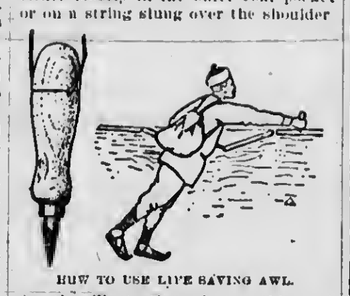
An explanation is not difficult. It can be proved mathematically that if the diameter of a circle be diminished one-half the circumference is also reduced to that extent, while the area is one-fourth of its former value. The circumference of the column of water being reduced one-half, its contact with the glass, and hence the adhesive force, is also diminished to that extent, while the cross section, and hence the weight, is decreased to a fourth of what it was before. Therefore the second column can be twice the height of the first without exceeding the lifting power.

Remarkable as the underlying principles of this phenomenon undoubtedly are, nature made use of them long before man made their discovery. Every tree and flower adds its testimony. The core of a tree or plant, instead of being a single open channel, consists of a spongelike substance containing many miniature tunnels, through which the sap and moisture collected by the roots flow upward in small rivulets, rising higher and higher in sheer defiance of the great law of gravity.—St. Louis Republic.

A LIFE SAVING AWL.

Tool to Aid Skaters to Regain Ice After Breaking Through.

Considering the many lives lost every year by breaking through or still oftener by skating into holes in the ice, a simple and very practical means of saving oneself from drowning should be of interest. The "life saving awl" herewith shown has long been in use in Holland, Frieshud and on the lake of Constance. It is probably in use in other places, but it does not seem to be generally known. It consists simply of a wooden handle about four inches long in which a strong steel point is firmly fastened. It is carried (preferably two of them) either loosely in the outer coat pocket or on a string slung over the shoulder



HOW TO USE LIFE SAVING AWL.

As the illustration shows, this awl enables the skater who has broken through to pull himself out.

The use of this little tool is as simple as the tool itself and hardly needs any explanation. The method of rescuing oneself is about as follows:

First.—As soon as you break through the ice extend the arms. Don't get excited.

Second.—Swim to the edge of the ice from whence you came. Rest one hand on the ice. Gently tread water.

Third.—Take the awl in the other hand and remove the cork from the point with the teeth. Reach over on the ice as far as possible and plant the point firmly in the surface.

Fourth.—By drawing in the arm you can now easily bring the hips on to the ice. Stand up, put the cork back on the point of the awl and skate off.

In this manner it is possible to get back on the ice in twenty or thirty seconds if one preserves his presence of mind and acts with reasonable deliberation. Do not waste your strength in useless floundering or swimming in different directions. The ice over which you have skated is the only part you know to be thick enough to bear you.

When one gets one hand on the edge of the ice he can easily raise his head and shoulders out of the water. The person using this awl for the first time will be surprised at the ease with which he can rescue himself. If the ice breaks when you first try to draw yourself up on it, which will seldom happen except on very new ice, plant the awl in the ice beyond where it has broken, and if necessary repeat the operation until you reach ice firm enough to hold you. If the ice all around is so thin that it will not hold a man in a sitting posture it will often hold when he lies flat. In such case pull the body while lying prone over on to firm ice. This can be done with one awl, but a second one will greatly expedite matters.—Translated From Der Winter by Popular Mechanics.

Stone Dust as a Shield.

The British royal commission on mines has recently continued its experiments on explosions of mixtures of coal dust and air. It has demonstrated that such mixtures are eminently explosive and also that the explosions can be mitigated or confined in area by means of stone dust, which is not explosive. A coal dust area was sandwiched between a dustless region and one spread with stone dust, and an explosion was produced in the coal dust by firing a cannon. The results appear to demonstrate that the effects of an explosion may be transmitted to a considerable distance over a dustless zone by the coal dust driven before the air blast, but that the stone dust has a restraining action beyond the merely negative one of not supplying explosive material.

Waterproofing Fabrics.

Some fabrics can easily be made waterproof by soaking them in a solution of celluloid in acetone, ether, amyl acetate or other volatile solvent, says the Scientific American. The evaporation of the solvent leaves the fabric coated with a thin film of celluloid, which is firmly united with the fiber. The thickness of the film can be increased by repeating the operation or by using a stronger solution. Fabrics thus treated are absolutely waterproof and can be washed without absorbing water. Linen which is first starched and then treated by this process can be washed with soap and water without removing the starch.

Uses of Tungsten Ore.

Since the discovery of tungsten ore as a metal for the making of a filament for electric lamps and the great saving in current that has resulted the general public has lost sight of the fact that the ore is used for other purposes. It is used in the production of tungsten steel and for the production of the tungstates which are employed in fixing the colors in dyeing, in giving weight to silk goods and in rendering cotton goods fireproof. The ore has recently been discovered in several parts of Canada.

Street Railway Service.

In round numbers there are 1,250 street and interurban railway companies in America, with a total of 35,000 miles of single track and 75,000 passenger cars. The total number of passengers carried annually is 10,000,000,000, and the gross annual income is $440,000,000.

Many a lame, weak and aching back is bad no more, thanks to Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands upon thousands of people are telling the good news of their experience with the Old Quaker Remedy. Here is an example worth reading:

T. J. Umbarger, 821 S. Union St., Traverse City, Mich., says: "Two years ago I gave a public testimonial in favor of Doan's Kidney Pills and today I can recommend them just as highly as I did then. For several years I was afflicted with kidney complaint and though I doctored faithfully and took a number of so-called kidney cures, I found but little relief. I had often heard of Doan's Kidney Pills and as I had seen them recommended by local people, I decided to give them a trial. I procured a supply and I was astonished at the results of their use. In a few weeks Doan's Kidney pills entirely relieved me and since that I have been free from kidney trouble. I have had no need of a kidney medicine during the past year or so. Other members of my family have taken Doan's Kidney Pills and in each case, benefit has been received."

GRAND TRAVERSE LINCOLN CLUB

Banquet Excelled all Previous Efforts of Organization

A. B. DOUGHERTY ELECTED PRESIDENT

Candidates for Governor All Made Addresses

J. M. Harris and Arthur L. Fitch Chosen Vice-President for Charlevoix County—Against Lakes to the Gulf Canal.

Friday night the Grand Traverse Lincoln Club held its fourth annual banquet at Traverse City. In attendance and interest shown all previous meetings were overshadowed.

Ten counties, of this region, are affiliated with the club and representatives from every county were present. Those present from this county were Captain D. E. Wilbur, Captain P. D. Campbell, Captain S. M. Rose, Arthur L. Fitch, E. B. Ward, Hon. R. W. Paddock, Lisle Shanahan, Judge F. W. Mayne, E. L. Johnson and Glenn M. DuBois of Charlevoix; Hon. J. M. Harris, J. E. Converse and R. E. Newville of Boyne City; Harry Price of East Jordan.

The business meeting of the club was held in the afternoon and resulted in the choice of the following officers:

President, A. B. Dougherty, Elk Rapids; Secretary, A. E. Nerlinger; Treasurer, E. K. Edwards; Executive committee, the above officers and John L. A. Galster of Petoskey and H. A. Musselman of Traverse City. Vice-presidents were chosen from each county, Charlevoix's choice being Hon. J. M. Harris and Arthur L. Fitch.

Early in the evening the speakers were given a reception in the room adjacent to the city opera house. Everybody thronged to meet the man of their choice for governor of Michigan.

Promptly on time the banquet was called to order by Judge Mayne, who took the place of President Adams, who was unable to be present. After a few remarks the meeting was turned over to President Dougherty, who introduced Speaker Campbell, who officiated as toastmaster. The first speaker, Hon. Grant Fellows of Hudson, spoke on Abraham Lincoln, delivering one of the finest addresses ever heard in this section.

The next speaker Hon. Chase S. Osborn, was the first of the gubernatorial candidates called upon. Mr. Osborn's subject was "Michigan." Mr. Osborn compared all parts of the globe, which he has visited in his extensive travels, with Michigan and said that Michigan looked the best to him of them all. Mr. Osborn protested against the passage of the Lakes to the Gulf Canal bill, now before congress, believing it would injure the fruit lands of this region. A resolution was passed protesting against the passage of the bill.

The next speaker, Lieutenant-governor Kelly, announced himself at home in Traverse City having visited it so often. Mr. Kelly compared the cost of running the state now and what the cost was during the administration of Governor Mason and also at the time of the civil war showing how the multiplicity of our state institutions and our growing state required more to maintain it.

E. A. Stowe of Grand Rapids spoke first on the new responsibilities put upon the people by the primary system and the neglect in duty which they too often show. After which he devoted his address to the great possibilities of the Grand Traverse region.

The last speaker, Hon. Amos S. Musselman, also talked upon the new responsibilities now placed upon the people, this fall being the first time they were ever called upon to name most of their public officials. Mr. Musselman said that history failed to record any time when the pople ever gave up any right which they had gained and urged everybody to take part in the primary next fall.

The rounds of applause which greeted each speaker demonstrated that they all had hosts of friends, who would like to see their favorite a winner in the contest.

The decorations, music and banquet was all that could be desired.

The retiring secretary R. E. Walters, who has served since the organization of the club was given a vote of thanks for his efficient work, as to him more than any other man is the great success of the organization due.

THE KNOCKERS CREED

Man comes into the world without his consent and leaves it against his will. During his stay on earth his time is spent in one continuous round of contraries and misunderstandings. In his infancy he's an angel; in his boyhood he's a devil; in his manhood he's every thing from a lizard up: in his duties he's a fool; if he raises a family he's a chump; if he raises a check he's a thief, and then the law raises hell with him; if he's a poor man, he's a poor manager and has no sense; if he's rich he's dishonest but considered smart; if he's a politician he's a grafter and a crook; if he's out of politics you can't place him as he is an undesirable citizen; if he goes to church he's a hypocrite; if he stays away he's a sinner; if he donates to foreign missions, he does it for show; if he doesn't he's stingy and a tightwad.

When he first comes into the world everybody wants to kiss him; before he goes out they all want to kick him. If he dies young there was a great future before him; if he lives to ripe old age, then, of course, he's living to save funeral expenses.

Life is a funny thing, isn't it?—An Ex-suppervisor.

SHAKESPEARE BANQUET

Was Most Brilliant Social Function of Season

Held at Paddock Home on Dixon Ave. last Thursday Evening.

The Shakespeare Study Club held its fourth Annual Banquet at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Paddock on Dixon Ave. last Thursday evening. The function, if possible, surpassed all previous ones in beauty of arrangement and in entertainment. The menu was complete and elaborate, but 'dainty' in all its details.

The President, Mrs. Arthur L. Fitch, in a short and happy address welcomed the guests and introduced as Toastmistress, Mrs. Alberl F. Bridge, who presided in her humorous yet dignified way. Mrs. Hampton handled the subject of "Our Lords," in a masterful way, in which flattery, satire, grim humor and good cheer commingled to such degree that the "Lords" could do nothing but sit tight and not blink an eyelash.

S. A. Marting, accompanied by Mrs. Swinton at the piano, sang "Who was Sylvia?" None could answer.

Mrs. Baker discussed the "Club Woman," in a pleasant manner. The club woman's sessions are not all night sessions. She must return to the children and the home for, unlike club men, with her the home comes first.

Mrs. Iddings, in her imitable style and with graceful diction, toasted the Domestic Woman."

"The Suffragist" was handled by Mrs. Chapel. The speaker displayed great familiarity with her subject and in upholding the affirmative of the question, whether women should vote, made many convincing arguments.

Dr. Armstrong was to answer the query proposed in his topic, "Who isn't can Read a Woman?" The Doctor could not find a suitable answer so left town, leaving his fellowmen to their fate. Several of the members, however, endeavored to take his place.

Ainslee Mayne, Clarence Wool, Wilfred Chapel and Earl Young, sons of members of the club, officiated as waiters and like everything connected with this function, nothing marred their service.

During the evening music was rendered by the Shakespeare Orchestra, consisting of Helen and Dorothy Armstrong, Hubert Paddock, Robert Bridge, Percy Crane and Amy Harsha, which was not the least pleasing feature.

Congressman Dodds has sent us a large quantity of vegetable seeds for distribution to COURIER readers. If you want any call at the office and get them before they are all gone. 12-1-3

ADVANCE SCHEDULES

Has Been Prepared by the Census Bureau

To Aid Farmers in Answering Questions of Enumerators.

A great increase in the accuracy of the census returns from the farmers, a considerable saving of the working time of the farm enumerators, and the removal of much of whatever misapprehensions and prejudices may exist among the farmers with regard to the census are the important results expected by the United States Census bureau to follow the use of the Advance Farm Schedule, which has been adopted and will be circulated, through the rural postmasters, among the farmers a short time before the actual census taking.

The employment of this advance schedule is a distinct innovation in census methods. It is the logical and practical outcome of the Census bureau's persistent effort for some time to give the farmers a clear and comprehensive preliminary knowledge of the farm census questions and to induce them to keep written records of their farm operations and equipment in readiness for the call of the enumerators, beginning April 15 next.

Four million copies of the schedule will be printed and distribution of them among farm owners and tenants will be intrusted to the farm enumerators soon after they are commissioned, about April 1.

Postmaster-General Hitchcock has promised the assistance of his department in the effective distribution of the schedules and he will issue instructions relative thereto to the rural postmasters. They will be required to address and forward to the farmers receiving mail at their offices, the advance farm schedules supplied them by the enumerators.

In a note to farmers on the front page of the schedule, Census Director Durand states:

"In accordance with the act of Congress, the census of the population and farms of the United States will begin on April 15, 1910. On or soon after that date an enumerator will call at your house for the purpose of obtaining the information concerning your farm.

"Many of the questions which will be asked you concerning the equipment and operations of your farm cannot be accurately answered by you without considerable thought and the making of careful calculations or estimates. Therefore, this form has been sent to you in advance, so that you may study the question at your convenience and have the answers written down before the enumerator comes.

"You are earnestly requested to read this form and instructions carefully, to write down the answers to all questions that apply to your farm, and to keep it until the enumerator comes. By doing this you can save yourself much time and contribute greatly to the success of the agricultural census.

"Besides the information concerning your farm, the enumerator will also ask your names, ages, and other facts concerning the members of your household."

MICHIGAN ROADS

Wooded Nutmeg State Commissioner Calls Them Good

James H. MacDonald, state highway commissioner of Connecticut, and for the last five years president of the American Road Builder's association, stopped in Detroit a few hours on his way east. Mr. MacDonald was in the state six years ago and at that time addressed the state legislature, urging the value of the good road movement.

"I want to congratulate Michigan on the showing she is making," said the Connecticut commissioner. "The state is in the front rank and the counties are contributing to the movement more than the state and that shows that the movement has found favor with the mass of the people. It shows that the people have confidence in it.

"The general good road movement has had a remarkable development. The American Good Roads association has been in existence six years and there are now twenty-two states affiliated with it. The movement has become almost universal.

"The foreign countries have the best roads, but with the introduction of the newer travel the old countries find that they must adopt new methods of repairing their roads. They had to import Americans to show them the way. There will be another international good roads convention in Brussels next July and two delegates will go from each state in the Union."

LAFEAN APPLE BILL

Now Being Pushed by Development Bureau

Would be of Vast Benefit to Fruit Growers of United States.

Just at present the Western Michigan Development Bureau as an organization, and the members as individuals, are putting their efforts in the endeavor to secure the passage of the Lafean apple bill. This instrument is being generally indorsed by our state granges and, if passed, will greatly improve the standard for apples and other fruits. It is the intent of its framers to have the bill become effective July 1 of the present year.

There are five specific sections to the bill, the first of which declares that, for the purpose of interstate and foreign commerce and commerce within the District of Columbia or the territories of the United States, the terms "closed package for apples" shall apply to any barrel, box, or basket in which the apples can not readily be seen or inspected.

Section 2 denotes the capacity of standard closed packages for apples which shall be shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerces, or sold or offered for sale in the District of Columbia.

Section 3 outlines the grading of apples shipped under this act as follows: Apples of one variety, which are well grown specimens, hand picked, of good color for the variety, normal shape, practically free from insect and fungus injury, bruises and other defects, except such as are necessarily caused in the operation of packing, or apples of one variety which are not more than ten per centum below the foregoing specifications, are standard grade "U. S. size A" if the minimum size of the apples is two and one half inches in transverse diameter; or are standard grade "U. S. size B," if the minimum size of the apple is two and one fourth inches in transverse diameter; or are standard grade "U. S. size C," if the minimum size of the apples is two inches in transverse diameter.

Section 4 provides specifically against misbranding any fruit packages while Section 5 denotes the date for the law's going into effect. It is a most comprehensive and concise instrument.

ENROLL AT SPRING ELECTION

If You Wish to Take Part in September Primary

PEOPLE TO NAME THEIR CANDIDATES

Three Have Announced Themselves for Governor

On Republican Ticket—United States Senator to be Named by Popular Vote for First Time in State's History.

One of the most important changes made in the new primary law, was that changing the date of party enrollment from just before the primary to the date of the spring election. This change was made so that enrollment would be made some time before the campaign become too warm between the several candidates, experience demonstrating that in order to keep a friend, one was tempted to enroll in another party column than he would otherwise. Members of all parties are required to enroll, the vicious system of the old law, whereby one party could adopt the primary system and another the convention system, which made it possible for the members of one party to name the candidates of both parties, being repealed. All parties must nominate under the primary system.

When the people of this county vote, as they surely will, next April, to adopt the primary system, they take upon themselves an added responsibility. The choice of the candidates of their party being put right up to them. Believing, as we do, that the people are always right, we urge everybody to drop everything and turn out to the primary next September.

Before that time, however, if you wish to take part in the naming of the public officials of your state and county you must enroll at the April election. If you neglect to enroll at that time, you forfeit your right to take part in what is, in reality, the real election. Having for so long fought to secure this right we can't conceive how any good citizen can neglect his duty to take his part in public affairs and surely there is no higher duty than the naming of our public officials. While good officials have been named under the convention system, in the great majority of cases, it is also true that men have been placed in high positions, who could never have been nominated by the direct system, and while the small turnouts at the primary has been urged by its opponents, as an argument against it, experience has demonstrated that when a man of that class, went before the people, they did turn out, and while too many have neglected to go to the polls and express their choice, the direct nomination system provided them with a check against improper candidates.

To sum up:

Don't fail to enroll April 4, and vote, yes.

Don't fail to vote in September.

Carfully study the record and promises made by the several candidates.

Don't fail to remember that the responsibility of making a wise choice is placed upon you, and work to secure a full vote in September.

For United States senator, two candidates are in the field, Julius Ceasar Burrows, the present senator, and Hon. Charles E. Townsend, whose record as a congressman has been brilliant and who would be a credit to the state in the senate.

For Governor three candidates are in the field for the republican nomination, Lieutenant-governor Kelly, who has served the state well in different official positions, Hon. Chase S. Osborn, who would

Advice Concerning Stomach Trouble and How to Remedy Them

Dyspepsia and indigestion with its train of ills starts many more unfortunates on the road to chronic invalidism than any other cause. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure in this case, and a timely recognition of a disordered condition

A physician who was asked to name the cause of stomach troubles, particularly dyspepsia and its train of ugly perversions of the stomach from which Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets is made, said: "My experience with Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets leads me to believe they contain the greatest remedy for stomach troubles known to the medical profession. They relieve distress after eating, prevent gas, belching and sour stomach, overcome dyspepsia, indigestion and nervousness, and bring about a condition in the stomach whereby food is assimilated and the whole system nourished. They are not a cure-all, but are a remedy for stomach troubles only, and they do their work well."

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets will insure healthy appetite, and digestion promotes nutrition. As evidence of our sincere faith in Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, we ask you to try them at our risk. If they do not give you entire satisfaction, we will return you the money you paid us for them, without question or formality. They come in three sizes, prices 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00. Do Weak Hearts Need Alcohol?

There are many good women refusing to take any part in temperance work because they say they must use alcohol for their weak hearts. The belief in this necessity for alcohol is a relic of the days when there was no scientific knowledge of its nature and effects. The sense of relief to a weak heart following a dose of alcohol is now understood, and the danger of frequent resort to this agent is emphasized by careful physicians.

Dr. J. J. Ridge, who was for years connected with the London Temperance Hospital, says: "In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred a 'weak heart' means indigestion. Alcohol will undoubtedly give temporary relief in these cases, and that is where the mischief comes in. If the cause is some temporary error in diet the effect of the alcohol may last long enough to enable nature to set matters right. In that case the alcohol seems to cure. But in the majority of cases the relief is only for a time. The 'weak heart' persits and has to be helped every day, perhaps several times a day. The fact is alcohol only hides the symptoms; it does not remove the cause. It even makes matters worse by leaving the nerves more impressionable after its effect has gone off. Alcohol has a narcotic or we deadening action, so that the irritation of the nerves of the stomach and bowels is diminished, and the reflex action on the heart is lessened. It has a secondary action on the blood vessels and other involuntary muscles so that spasm is relaxed, pain from that cause relieved, and the blood allowed to flow more freely through the small vessels. Relief being temporarily obtained, the patient does not realize the necessity for any alteration of the diet or habits which have brought on the trouble. But, while alcohol may give this relief, its ultimate effects tend to aggravate the complaint, and the more people take the worse do they become."

Dr. Ridge says again: "Alcohol is totally unable to strengthen the heart, or to give tone to the blood vessels. The relief to the nervous sensations which it gives is due to its benumbing action, the nerves being rendered less sensible to existing conditions, although whatever disease exists is by no means eliminated. The only way to avert the gout-experiences of heart disease is to strengthen the heart, and that is to be done by strengthening the body generally by exercise, baths, and regular living. Many of the heart-attacks are not little pyrexias, improper food or drinks. The best remedies are a cold sponge bath, avoidance of overeating, plain wholesome food, distasteful to nicer conditions, and regular out-of-door exercise. Many nervous sensations are caused by flatulence, and these can be overcome by very little attention to the diet."

Dr. J. H. Kellogg of Battle Creek Sanitarium says: "A proportion of the heart is especially developed by exercise, by exposure to cold, by moderate doses of some kinds of poisons, and by certain diseases. The eye is so constructed that it will see what ought to be, and not what actually is, when a preconceived notion is entertained."

Prof. Hyslop, editor of the Psychological Review, says: "Hypnotism is by no means dangerous as it is commonly supposed. He adds: "In fact, those having diseased hearts are usually awakened out of it in a few years, and on the other hand, those with thick-room hearts are the ones that are always overtaken."

To be continued next week.

Literary Notes

Some Facts About Hypnotism

"No competent expert will be found today to say that a person is invariably obliged to execute all hypnotic commands given him," says H. Addington Bruce in the Woman's Home Companion for March. "And yet while some such thing is the ideal that hypnotic experts are possible, the consensus of scientific opinion is that no person who would not in his normal state perpetrate the crime suggested would perpetrate it if hypnotized.

"It is equally certain, though, that under hypnotic influence people are liable to accuse themselves of crimes they have not committed. This is a real danger, which ought to be carefully guarded against in courts of justice.

"There is reason to believe that many 'police confessions' extorted from accused persons by the processes of the so-called 'third degree' and afterward found to be untrue are made in a hypnotic state. The persistent questioning of the prisoner by the police, their pitiless insistence that 'he is guilty and knows he is guilty,' may develop in him that peculiar hysterical condition in which, as has already been said, he may become spontaneously hypnotized by an unexpected noise or the sudden flashing of a light."

Hypnotism and Will Power

"The more will power a person has," says H. Addington Bruce in the Woman's Home Companion for March, "the more readily can he be hypnotized, for there are certain conditions involving the exercise of will power on the subject's part—for instance, concentration of the attention—that must be fulfilled before the hypnotic state can be brought on. For this reason, the weak-willed, the mentally defective, the insane, are very hard to hypnotize.

"Doctor Voisin, a celebrated French alienist, found that he could not hypnotize more than ten per cent of the inmates of the asylum with which he was connected. Whereas an English experimenter named Vincent hypnotized with ease ninety-six per cent of a large group of university men."

Chapter 28

ORDE said nothing to Newmark concerning this purposed new investment.

"It is for Bobby," he told himself, "and I want Bobby and no one else to run it. Joe would want to take charge naturally."

He walked downtown next morning, busily formulating his scheme.

"Joe," said Orde, "just how do we stand on that upper peninsula stumpage?"

"We've made two payments of $17,000 each and have still two to make of the same amount."

"What could we borrow on it?"

"Fifty or seventy-five thousand."

"Joe," said Orde, "I want to raise about $75,000 on my share in this concern."

Newmark said nothing, but for some time thought busily. His light blue eyes narrowed to a slit.

"I'll have to figure on it awhile," said he at last and turned back to his mail. All day he worked hard. At 6 o'clock he walked to his home. Here he turned into a study, quietly and richly furnished ten years in advance of the taste then prevalent in Mourovia, where he sank into a deep cushioned chair and lit the much chewed cigar. He looked with approval on the dark walnut bookcases, the framed prints and etchings, the bronzed student's lamp on the square table desk and the rugs on the polished floor.

Fagin these he figured all the evening.

"Mr. Newmark, sir," came a respectful voice, "it is just short of 7."

"Very well," replied Newmark.

Newmark yawned, threw aside the cigar, of which he had smoked but an inch, and passed from his study into his bedroom across the hall. He bathed in the adjoining bathroom, shaved carefully between the two wax lights which were his whim and dressed in what were then known as swallowtail clothes. Then, with all the deliberation of one under fire of a hundred eyes, he proceeded to the dining room. His butler, Mallock, too, wore the swallowtail, but its buttons were of gilt.

Newmark seated himself in a leather upholstered mahogany chair before a small round mahogany table. The room was illuminated only by four wax candles with red shades.

He ate deliberately and with enjoyment the meal, exquisitely prepared and exquisitely presented to him. Afterward he returned to the study for his coffee. He opened a drawer in his desk, extracting therefrom some bank books and small personal account books. From these he figured all the evening. When he had finished his cold eye exhibited a gleam of satisfaction. He had resolved on a course of action.

"Orde," said Newmark next morning as the former entered the office, "I think I can arrange this matter."

Orde drew up a chair.

"I talked last evening with a man from Detroit named Thayer, who thinks he may advance $75,000 on a mortgage on our northern peninsula stumpage. For that, of course, we will give the firm's note with interest at 10 per cent. I will turn this over to you."

"That's"— began Orde.

"Hold on," interrupted Newmark. "As collateral security you will deposit for me your stock in the Boom company, indorsed in blank. If you do not pay the full amount of the firm's note to Thayer, then the stock will be turned in to me."

"I see," said Orde.

"Now, don't misunderstand me," said Newmark dryly. "This is your own affair, and I do not urge it on you. If we raise as much as $75,000 on that upper peninsula stumpage it will be all it can stand, for next year we must make a third payment on it. If you take that money it is of course proper that you pay the interest on it. And if there's any possibility of the foreclosure of the mortgage it is only right that you run all the risk of loss—not myself."

"Certainly," said Orde.

"From another point of view," went on Newmark, "you are practically mortgaging your interest in the Boom company for $75,000. That would make, on the usual basis of a mortgage, your share worth above $200,000, and $400,000 is a high valuation of our property."

"That looks more than decent on your part," said Orde.

"Of course it's none of my business what you intend to do with this," went on Newmark, "but unless you're sure you can meet these notes I should strongly advise against it."

"For how long a time could I get this?" asked Orde at length.

"I couldn't promise it for longer than five years," replied Newmark.

"That would make about $15,000 a year and interest. Well, I don't see why I can't carry that easily on our present showing and prospects."

"If nothing untoward happens," insisted Newmark.

"It's not much risk," said Orde hopefully. "There's nothing surer than lumber. What do our earnings figure anyway?"

"We're driving 150,000,000 at a profit of about 60 cents a thousand. That's $90,000—in five years $450,000. We ought to clean up $5 a thousand on our mill. That's about a hundred thousand on what we've got left."

"And that little barge business nets us about twelve or fifteen thousand a year."

"For the five years about $60,000 more. Let's see—that's a total of, say, $600,000 in five years."

"We will have to take up in that time," said Newmark, "two payments on timber, the note on the First National, the Commercial note, the liabilities on the Boom company—$300,000 all told."

"Correct," said Orde. "Good enough. I ought to get along on a margin like that."

He set to figuring. The results he eyed doubtfully. Each year he must pay in interest the sum of $7,500. Each year he would have to count on a proportionate saving of $15,000 toward payment of the notes. In addition, he must live.

But Orde was fond of risks.

"Never mind. It's for Bobby," said he to himself. "And maybe the rate of interest will go down, and I'll be able to borrow on the California tract if anything does go wrong."

He stepped across the hall into Taylor's office.

"Frank," began Orde immediately, "I came to see you about that California timber matter. Now, what I want is this"— He proceeded to outline carefully the agreement between himself and Newmark, while the lawyer took notes and occasionally interjected a question.

"All right," said the latter when the details had been mastered. "I'll draw the necessary notes and papers."

"Now," went on Orde, producing the bundle of papers from his pocket, "here's the abstract of title. I wish you'd look it over. It's a long one, but not complicated, as near as I can make out. Trace seems to have acquired this tract mostly from the original homesteaders and the like, who, of course, take title direct from the government. I want you to look it over, to be sure everything's shipshape."

"One other thing," concluded Orde. "I want this investment to get no farther than the office door. You see, this is for Bobby, and nothing spoils a man sooner than to imagine the thing's all cut-and-dried for him, and nothing keeps him going like the thought that he's got to rustle his own opportunities. Bobby's going to have the best education possible. He's going to learn to be a lumberman by practical experience, and that practical experience he'll get with other people. No working for his dad in Bobby's. I can tell you. Then, when he's worked into the harness a little, the old man will take him out and show him the fine big sugar pine and say to him: 'There, my boy; there's your opportunity, and you've earned it. How does Orde & Son sound to you?'"

Taylor nodded several times.

"I believe you're on the right track. Count on me."

As Orde walked home that evening after a hot day his mind was full of speculation as to the immediate future. He had a local reputation for wealth, and no one knew better than himself how important it is for a man in debt to keep up appearances. Nevertheless decided retrenchment would be necessary.

"How does Orde & Son sound to you?"

Chapter 29

NEWMARK marched precisely down the street to Heinzman's office. He found the little German in. Newmark deposited a preliminary plunge into the business that had brought him

"Heinzman," said he abruptly, "my partner wants to raise $75,000 for his personal use. I have agreed to get him that money from the firm."

"I vas sorry," said Heinzman shrewdly. "As security in case he cannot pay the notes the firm will have to give he has signed an agreement to turn over to me his undivided one-half interest in our enterprise."

"Vell? You vant to borrow dot money of me?" asked Heinzman. "I could not raise it."

"I know that perfectly well," replied Newmark coolly. "You are going to have difficulty meeting your July notes as it is."

Heinzman hardly seemed to breathe, but red blazed in his eye.

"I intend," went on Newmark, "to furnish this money myself. It must, however, seemeta be loaned by another. I want you to lend this money on mortgage."

"What for?" asked Heinzman.

"For a one-tenth of Orde's share in case he does not meet those notes."

"But, he vill meet the notes," objected Heinzman. "You are a prosperous concern. I know somethings of your business also."

"He thinks he will," rejoined Newmark grimly. "I will merely point out to you that his entire income is from the firm and that from this income he must save twenty odd thousand a year."

"If the firm has lord luck"— said Heinzman.

"Exactly," finished Newmark.

"Vy you come to me?" demanded Heinzman at length.

"Well, I'm offering you a chance to get even with Orde. I don't imagine you love him."

"Vat's de matter mit my gettin' efen with you, too?" cried Heinzman. "Ain't you beat me out at Lansing?"

Newmark smiled coldly under his clipped mustache.

"I'm offering you the chance of making anywhere from thirty to fifty thousand dollars."

"Perhaps. And suppose this little scheme don't work out."

"And," pursued Newmark calmly, "I'll carry you over in your present obligations." He suddenly hit the arm of his chair with his clinched fist. "Heinzman, if you don't make those July payments what's to become of you? Where's your timber and your mills and your new house and that pretty daughter of yours?"

Heinzman winced visibly.

"I vill get an extension of time," said he feebly.

"Will you?" countermarked Newmark.

"Vell, maybe," laughed Heinzman uneasily. "It looks to me like a vhisner."

"All right, then," said Newmark briskly. "I'll make out a mortgage at 10 per cent for you, and you'll lend the money on it. At the proper time, if things happen that way, you will foreclose. That's all you have to do with it. Then when the Humberland comes to you under foreclosure you will reconvey an undivided nine-tenths interest—for proper consideration, of course, and without recording the deed."

Heinzman laughed with assumed lightness.

"Suppose I fool you," said he. "I guess I joost keep it for mineself."

Newmark looked at him coldly.

"I wouldn't," he advised. "You may remember the member from Lapeer county in that charter fight and the $500 for his vote. Try it on and see how much evidence I can bring up. It's called bribery in this state and means penitentiary usually."

"You don't take a joke," complained Heinzman.

Newmark arose.

"It's understood, then?" he asked.

"How so I know you play fair?" asked the German.

"You don't. It's a case where we have to depend more or less on each other. But I don't see what you stand to lose, and anyway you'll get carried over those July payments," Newmark reminded him.

Heinzman was plainly uneasy.

"If you reduce the firm's profits he iss going to suspect," he admonished.

"Who said anything about reducing the firm's profits?" said Newmark impatiently. "If it does work out that way we'll win a big thing. If it does not we'll lose nothing."

He nodded to Heinzman and left the office. As he entered the office of his own firm his eye fell on Orde's bulky form. He paused involuntarily, and a slight shiver shook his frame—the daintily instinctive repulsion of a cat for a large, robustious dog. Controlling himself, he stepped forward.

"I've made the loan," he announced. "The banks wouldn't touch northern peninsula, so I had to go to private individuals."

"Don't care who deals it out," laughed Orde.

"Thayer backed out, so finally I got the whole amount from Heinzman," Newmark announced.

"I didn't know he was friendly enough to lend us money."

"Business is business," replied Newmark.

From the moment Orde completed the secret purchase of the California timberlands from Trace he became an unwitting participant in one of the strangest duels known to business history. Newmark opposed to him all the subtleties, all the ruses and expedients to which his position lent itself. Orde, sublimely unconscious, deployed the magnificent resources of strength, energy, organization and combative spirit that animated his pioneer's soul.

Newmark worked under this disadvantage: He had carefully to avoid the slightest appearance of an attitude inimical to the firm's very best prosperity. If the smallest incident should bring clearly before Orde that Newmark might have an interest in reducing profits he would know the logic of the latter's devious ways. For this reason Newmark did not dare make loud sales, awkward transactions. The profits of

WORLD'S HIGHEST BRIDGE.

New Steel Girder Structure Spans Sioule Gorge, In France.

The highest bridge in the world is in France and has been opened recently. It is the Fades railway viaduct, which is to carry the Paris main line between Monthucan and Clermont-Ferrand over the Sioule gorge. The viaduct, which is situated between St. Priest Szuret and Anelzes-St. Georges, rises to a height of nearly 450 feet above the level of the valley. French journals state that it is some fifteen feet higher than the Goktcek bridge, in the Shan hill of Burma.

The new bridge is a continuous steel girder structure and is supported on two enormous rectangular piers of masonry over 300 feet high, which in turn rest on bases nearly seventy feet high. The 43,000 cubic yards of masonry upon which the bridge is supported are founded on solid rock. The center span between the two piers is 470 feet long and is flanked by two spans 380 feet in length. The center span was constructed in sections some twenty to twenty-five feet long, which were built out section by section from each pier until the two arms met and were joined.

The work, which was begun in October, 1901, and has cost $800,000, was delayed by the subsidence of the rock foundation of one of the abutments, the designs of which had ultimately to be modified. This modification delayed work on the superstructure for several years. No lives have been lost during the construction.—Chicago Tribune.

A Rule For Stairways.

In the building of stairways and ladders there is a simple little rule that is of general application and makes the most comfortable and practicable affair to climb. It is:

2 × the riser + the tread = 24 to 25 inches

For a ladder this gives a vertical distance between rungs of one foot, and the rule is based on the common sense principle that it is more than twice as hard to lift as it is to go on the level, but there is less of it to do.

In a power plant the stairs should be straight in order to permit of handling long lengths of pipe, etc. In regard to width, two feet nine inches is about the minimum, but the stairs are sometimes cut a little narrower. Where room is available it is better to make the stairs five feet wide, which gives plenty of room for two to pass without crowding.—Power.

Petroleum as a Disinfectant.

Petroleum as a disinfectant, for checking the spread of plague, is advocated by some medical officers in India. It is pointed out that during the pestilence that swept Europe long ago the oil regions of Baku were untouched, although in the surrounding country 50 per cent of the population perished. Lerche, who visited Baku in 1735, wrote, "It is quite likely that the fact that the black death did not touch Baku was due to petroleum."

The Cost of Smoke.

In an address before the American Civic association Herbert M. Wilson, chief engineer in the United States geological survey, places the annual damage and waste by smoke in the United States at $500,000,000. In the large cities alone, or about $6 to each man, woman and child of the population.

POWER FROM BROOK DAM.

Expert Urges Farmers to Store Up Water For Various Uses.

By EDWARD R. TAYLOR.

Mr Farmer, what are you doing with the brook on your farm? Let the brook have its own sweet way in a hurry and sometimes in a great hurry to get its waters into yonder river? Why not curb it and make good use of it as it passes? John T. McDonald of Delhi, N. Y., some ten years ago began making good use of his brook—lights his house and buildings, runs saws and various machines in a little shop in winter and on rainy days and has enough power in addition to heat his house if he fitted up for it. Why don't you do likewise? The dam is made from stones and earth from the nearby fields, costs but little, securing a pond of about three acres which abounds in beautiful trout and other fish, and from the pond Mr. McDonald cuts 500 tons of ice per year for himself and neighbors.

It is really the most valuable land he has. Did you know if you have the only pond on your stream all the largest fish will make it their habitation, and if you make a spillway in connection with your dam large fish from below will come up and settle in your pond, and you and your boys and girls will go fishing there for the profit as well as for the fun of it? Make a safe place and teach the children to swim. Besides, it is stimulating and grateful in summer weather.

I almost think you are really interested, and perhaps are thinking now where you have the best site for the dam. Begin the work by laying down sewer pipe two or more feet in diameter and twenty, thirty or more feet long, according to the size of embankment you must build. This can be in the bed of the stream, diverting the water for the time by a little dam above. On the upstream end of this pipe build a square box of plank, as high as you wish the water to be in the pond. It will take away lots of water safely in floods. Near its bottom on the upstream side fix a gate of plank which you can open to drain the pond in summer for repairs. If you put a grating made, say, of old strips of wagon tire in front of the gate it will keep back all the fish that are too large to go through. This all done in good shape, you can let the water run through the pipe while you are building your dam proper.

At the right of the spillway of Charles M. Call's dam near my home is a square box connecting with the sewer pipe just described. This spillway is thirty-two feet wide, and the piers each side stand about four feet above, having been raised about two feet for safety after Mr. Call had seen the water almost get over his bank the previous spring. Too much care cannot be taken in having ample and safe spillway to take all the water that can possibly come down. With such adequate spillways dirt dams are about the best and cheapest a farmer can construct, as almost all the work can be done by his own teams and scraper. Below the spillway on the lower side of the dam is a good place to dump stones if you have them on the farm; if not and the bottom is not of hard material you must finish with cement grout so it cannot undermine.

There is a little power house containing the water wheel and the little dynamo of about six horsepower which furnishes light for Mr. Call's house and buildings. The machinery requires little attention, being oiled once a week and stopped and started from the house by a wire connected with a simple attachment to the gate of the water wheel. Here are city comforts right in the home of the farmer. With such a power he can churn, run a washing machine, saw wood, run a feed cutter.

Lots of farmers during the dry summers draw water some distance for stock who need not have done so if they had made a pond and retained the flood water. Such a pond would be valuable even if not used for power. I have today a letter from a friend who made a dam in a brook passing through his back yard which is dry for several weeks every summer, thus making a pond which stored flood waters; on the bank of which he set up a gasoline pumping engine, by means of which he irrigated his orchard on land above.

How to Weigh an Automobile.

To obtain the exact weight of an automobile and the weight carried on each pair of wheels it is necessary to use a platform scale—that is, any scale that has a platform sufficiently wide to take the entire length of the machine—then proceed in this manner. First weigh the whole car. Next weigh the back of the car. To do this the middle of the car should be over the edge of the platform. The front of the car should be weighed in the same manner. If this has been carefully done the last two weights when added together should give within twenty pounds of the entire weight of the car

GETS A STRAW MAN

Shower Tendered Miss Williams Who is to Marry Mr. Straw.

Mrs. James Tunreth gave a miscellaneous shower Saturday afternoon for her sister, Miss Mamie Williams, who is soon to be married to Sam Straw of Charlevoix. The decorations were green and white. A mock wedding took place which was heartily enjoyed, after which the spinsters present received proposals accompanied with photographs, while the married ladies were contented with tiny dolls on ribbons. The proposals were read aloud but we are not prepared to say whether they were all accepted. An interesting feature was the unwrapping of the many pretty and useful presents by Miss Williams. Delicious refreshments were served to about 25, after which each guest departed with straws but the genuine was left with Miss Williams, who is soon to be a Straw.—Boyne City Journal.

RATS AND PETROLEUM

Rodents Have an Aversion to the Oil and Flee From It.

The treatment of stagnant water with petroleum, which is effectual against mosquitoes, operates also in an indirect manner on rats. Mr. Mandoul made investigations on board L'Iserethle during September, 1907. These are abstracted in the Archives de Parasitologie, says the Scientific American. One of the holds of the ship, which contained silk cocoons, had been almost entirely devastated by rats. Their presence there had probably been due to the saccharine water from the fruits and ice placed near the hold in question. To this body of water, which it had been impossible to remove, petroleum was added. Two weeks later, on arriving at Marseilles, it was found that not one cocoon had been damaged by the rodents.

Mr. Mandoul sought to find out how the petroleum had been so efficacious. He endeavored to determine the sensitiveness of the rat to petroleum. A sewer rat was subjected during about forty-five minutes to the action of the vapor of about 100 grams of commercial petroleum in a closed atmosphere (a bell communicating with the exterior by a narrow orifice). The animal began to exhibit labored breathing and during the last quarter hour a lassitude in its movements. After these manifestations the animal licked the hairs of its beard. It was depressed and ate little. Three days afterward it was found dead in its cage. The autopsy showed that its viscera were very congested and that the intestines contained some petroleum. Another rat was subjected to a diet of petroleum. It refused bread treated with petroleum, but accepted meats. It died after about a quarter of an hour.

The author made inquiry in petroleum refineries and upon boats which transport this product. Rats do not exist there or are very rare. Mr. Mandoul concludes that rats have a peculiar aversion for petroleum, which drives them away rather than poisons them, aversion with which they are inspired resulting from their desire to seek shelter from its toxic action. In addition, the petroleum, thanks to its insecticidal effect, rids the rats of their parasites and of the infectious germs which they are able to transmit.

ROCKEFELLER'S WEALTH TO BENEFIT HUMANITY

Oil King's Crowning Philanthropy Will Be of Service to All Peoples For All Time---Only Son to Direct Distribution of Father's Millions

Work of New Foundation So Planned That Money Can Be Used For Any Purpose---Its Application to Be as Broad as Human Needs

By WALTON WILLIAMS.

THE bill Senator J. H. Gallinger introduced providing for the Rockefeller foundation is the beginning of the most gigantic benefaction ever undertaken by a single individual in the history of the world. It is understood to be the design of the oil magnate to give away the bulk of his vast fortune and to embrace the whole world in his charity. The almoner who will direct the giving of the funds is his only son, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who has resigned from the Standard Oil directorate and from other positions in order to devote his time to the work. As the younger Rockefeller is practically his father's sole natural heir, he is placed in the unique position of sowing broadcast the world's largest single fortune, which might otherwise have come to himself.

Senator Gallinger, the man who introduced the bill and who is chairman of the committee which will consider it, said he knew little regarding the details of Mr. Rockefeller's proposition.

"The bill was sent to me for introduction," he said, "by Mr. Rockefeller's lawyers. They did not give me any explanation of its purposes beyond that indicated in its phraseology.

"I believe the corporation proposed will be made the vehicle by which Mr. Rockefeller will dispose of virtually all of his hundreds of millions of dollars before his death and put large sums in trust for the continuance of the work.

"Evidently his intention is to spend money on a scheme of philanthropy more gigantic than ever conceived by a human being in history."

Starr J. Murphy, Mr. Rockefeller's personal counsel and one of the five men named as incorporators of the foundation, said:

"The purpose of the plan is to enable Mr. Rockefeller to broaden the scope of his charities. He doesn't want to be confined to narrow channels. He has not arranged the details of the plan, but the foundation is intended to take the place of the general education board, under which Mr. Rockefeller has given away $53,000,000.

Money Not to Be Tied Up.

"The new organization is to be of a character similar to that of the Sage foundation. Mr. Rockefeller is averse to tying up his money in channels where it may become useless.

"The men who are to incorporate the foundation were chosen by Mr. Rockefeller because he believes that their experiences in handling other great sums of money with which he has intrusted them and their research work and ability to apply the results of that work fit them to handle this new and larger undertaking better than any new men he might select.

"Senator Gallinger was asked to introduce the bill because he is the head of the District of Columbia committee, and it is proposed to establish the headquarters of the foundation in Washington."

It was made plain that this foundation was to be Mr. Rockefeller's final and most comprehensive means of doing good in the world with his money not only while he lived, but for many years, even centuries, after he is dead. Both incorporators gave inquirers to understand that the new source of benefits to humanity was to have no limitation in scope, time, country or race, but was designed to crown all that Mr. Rockefeller had done before and to be as broad and farreaching in its application as humanity itself.

Rockefeller's Previous Gifts.

Fred T. Gates, one of the proposed incorporators of the Rockefeller foundation, has given an estimate of the oil man's past benefactions.

"Mr. Rockefeller," said Mr. Gates, "has, to my knowledge, given away in the last twenty years more than $150,000,000. The total sum is probably greater than that, and it is extremely doubtful if Mr. Rockefeller himself knows or could find out if he tried how much he has given away. He has bestowed millions where the public has not known or suspected. Sometimes his gifts become public, many times they do not."

By Mr. Gates' own statement Mr. Rockefeller has given $37,000,000 of which the public has no knowledge. As far as has been stated publicly and in detail, however, Mr. Rockefeller has given away $113,655,000, distributed in this way:

Who the Incorporators Are.

Of the five incorporators named in the Gallinger bill those besides the Messrs. Rockefeller are Starr J. Murphy, Frederick T. Gates and Charles O. Heydt.

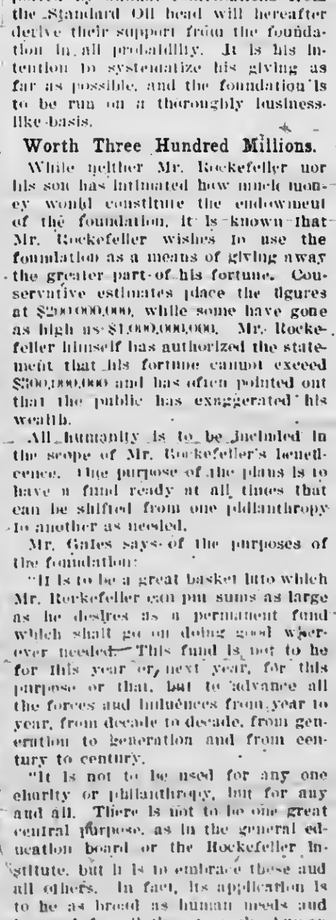
Since 1904 Mr. Murphy has been exclusively engaged as the adviser and representative of Mr. Rockefeller in benevolent matters. He was born at Avon, Hartford county, Conn., in 1860, a son of the Rev. Dr. Elijah U. Murphy. He was educated at Adelphi academy, Brooklyn; Amherst college, from which he was graduated with the bachelor's degree in 1881, and the Columbia University Law school, LL. B. cum laude, in 1883. He practiced law in New York city from the year of graduation until becoming associated with Mr. Rockefeller. He is a director of the American Linseed company and a member of the general education board.

Mr. Gates, who is chairman of the general education board, is a native of Maine. He was educated for the ministry and from 1880 to 1888 was pastor of the Central Baptist church in Minneapolis. He left the pulpit to become corresponding secretary of the American Baptist Educational society. Since 1893 he has been exclusively engaged as the business and benevolent representative of Mr. Rockefeller, in many cases being manager or president of the boards of educational, industrial and charitable organizations of which Mr. Rockefeller is the chief financial support.

The only member of the foundation board not generally known in educational and philanthropic circles is Mr. Heydt. He is a comparatively young man, the private secretary of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and is described as a member of Mr. Rockefeller's "official family."

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is thirty-three years old. His father is seventy-one. The son withdrew from the directorate of the United States Steel corporation recently. He is still connected with many other large business interests, among them the Delaware and Lackawanna railroad, of which he is a member of the board of managers, and the American Linseed company, of which he is a director. He is also a trustee of the University of Chicago, an institution to which the elder Rockefeller has given $25,300,000.

It is planned to make the younger Rockefeller executive head of the foundation as soon as the bill providing for its incorporation in the District of Columbia is passed. He intends to surround himself with additional incorporators—possibly twenty-five—who shall advise him in the establishment of what now appears to be the greatest systematic undertaking of the kind in all history. The foundation, in fact, will occupy a position in the world of philanthropy corresponding to that of the Standard Oil company in the business world.



JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER.

Institutions which have been supported by annual contributions from the Standard Oil head will hereafter derive their support from the foundation in all probability. It is his intention to systematize his giving as far as possible, and the foundation is to be run on a thoroughly business-like basis.

Worth Three Hundred Millions.

While neither Mr. Rockefeller nor his son has intimated how much money would constitute the endowment of the foundation, it is known that Mr. Rockefeller wishes to use the foundation as a means of giving away the greater part of his fortune. Conservative estimates place the figures at $200,000,000, while some have gone as high as $1,000,000,000. Mr. Rockefeller himself has authorized the statement that his fortune cannot exceed $300,000,000 and has often pointed out that the public has exaggerated his wealth.

All humanity is to be included in the scope of Mr. Rockefeller's benefaction. The purpose of the plans is to have a fund ready at all times that can be shifted from one philanthropy to another as needed.

Mr. Gates says of the purposes of the foundation:

"It is to be a great basket into which Mr. Rockefeller can put sums as large as he desires as a permanent fund which shall go on doing good wherever needed. This fund is not to be for this year or next year, for this purpose or that, but to advance all the forces and influences from year to year, from decade to decade, from generation to generation and from century to century.

"It is not to be used for any one charity or philanthropy, but for any and all. There is not to be one great central purpose, as in the general education board or the Rockefeller Institute, but it is to embrace these and all others. In fact, its application is to be as broad as human needs and be used for all time to make human life more useful and happy and human suffering less.

"My impression is that the bill was framed to permit the work to be directed from any point in the United States found desirable. I do not believe it will be necessary to have the general offices in Washington."

New Road Preserver That Works.

The Essex county (N. J.) park commission believes that it has found the most serviceable and at the same time the simplest road preserver and dust eliminator in a cheap preparation which is made from wood pulp and, mixed with water, is spread on the roads by means of an ordinary sprinkler. The material has been tried on the roads of Orange park with great success. The mixture, while holding the surface together, hardens it and resists the wear of automobiles.

One of the most prominent of the arguments brought out at the farmers' institute was the necessity of spraying. The Spray motor Company of Buffalo, have placed an outfit in our show rooms. Call and see it.

GOOD ROADS MEAN PROGRESS.

They Tend to Increase the Value of Property.

WILL LOWER COST OF LIVING

Farm Lands Will Be Settled More Rapidly, More Good Crops Will Be Raised, and the Consumer Will Receive Supplies at Smaller Prices.

A team of horses struggling along a mud road in the endeavor to draw half a load affords a striking object lesson of road improvement when compared to a team drawing a heavily loaded wagon at a comfortable trot along a stone surfaced road. This isolated example must be multiplied by 3,000,000 in order to obtain the cumulative effect of bad roads upon traffic in the United States. Not less than $250,000,000 is the useless tribute annually levied upon the people of the United States by its bad roads.

In 1896 a widespread inquiry made by the office of public roads indicated that the average cost of hauling on roads in the United States was 25 cents per ton per mile. In 1900 the bureau of statistics ascertained from its 2,800 county correspondents that the average cost per ton per mile was about 23 cents and the average length of haul 9.4 miles.

The high cost of hauling is not the only burden which the American people are carrying by reason of their bad roads. In traversing a region of country isolated from markets by reason of bad roads one is struck by the wastes of untilled land and by the lack of variety in the products. This is a condition more frequently due to lack of adequate transportation facilities than to lack of industry and intelligence of the inhabitants.

The point may be illustrated by assuming a series of concentric circles to be drawn about a market town or railroad station, constituting zones of production in all of which the roads are uniformly bad. Within the first zone all products can be delivered to market at a profit. Within the second zone certain products must be eliminated because of the length of haul. Milk, small fruits and certain kinds of vegetables requiring quick delivery and careful transportation might be cited as examples.

In the third zone still other products must be eliminated because of the prohibitive cost of hauling. The fourth zone will include only those products which can be held until the roads are passable and then hauled long distances and sold at a profit. Beyond this zone the land must be left unproductive or utilized for grazing and timber.

Every improvement in the roads leading from this market widens these zones, makes unproductive land productive and enables the farmer to exercise a wider discretion in determining the character of his crops. The prosperity of the individual farmer becomes far greater, the traffic of the railroad increases, the consumer receives better supplies at lower prices, and thus the beneficial effects continue in an ever widening circle.

While it is impossible to assign an arbitrary percentage or amount to represent the increase in land values by reason of road improvement, it is generally believed that the average increase per acre within the zone of influence of an improved road would be from $2 to $5 per acre. As there are about 850,000,000 acres of farm lands improved and unimproved in the United States the possibilities of aggregate increase in value are enormous.

These figures constitute conclusive evidence of the immensity of traffic on the common roads. They do more—they give food for reflection as to where the cumulative losses in wear and tear of wagons, harness and teams, due to poor roads, will land us on the debit side. Nobody can ever approximately estimate this drain, but everybody must know it is in terms of millions.

The loss in dollars is serious enough for grave concern, but when the additional charge is made that bad roads are a menace to our institutions, our health and our educational development it constitutes an indictment of such gravity as to demand paramount consideration. Hundreds of millions of fertile acres remain untilled while the insanitary and unwholesome city tenements are crowded with human beings whose standard of living must result in their mental, moral and physical decay.

It is not generally realized that our 2,155,000 miles of road constitute a great source of disease. By means of dust disease germs enter the human system. This is particularly true of tuberculosis germs. Roads of the future in great centers of population will be practically dustless, and the bituminous and other binders which will be used in the construction of such roads will not only minimize the danger of disease by reducing the dust nuisance, but they are in a measure possessed of antiseptic properties.

There is no phase of life in the country, social or economic, which is not affected by good roads. There is a direct relation between improved highways and the value of land, the attendance of children at school, the health of the community and everything else that tends to make life in the country efficient. And this, in turn, affects the people in the cities who live on the country products. It is a task—the maintenance of good roads—which affects every person in the country, no matter where he lives or what his profession.

Road building is an art based upon a science. In this age of specialists it almost surpasses belief that the American people, so practical in all other lines of endeavor, should permit their golden millions to be frittered away by men who for the most part know little or nothing about either the science or the art of road building. There are today more than 1,000 petty road officials in the United States, each and all receiving compensation.

Very few of these men devote more than a fraction of their time to road work, because their interests lie elsewhere and their compensation is too small to enable them to devote their entire time to the work. It is not surprising that a century and a quarter of this kind of supervision has resulted in the present chaotic condition of our public roads. The reforms that should take place will provide a comparatively small body of trained, competent road builders devoting their entire time to continuous road work.

Not only must the roads be built by trained men, but they must be kept in repair.

The road building era has already begun. Already great strides have been made in recent years toward bringing about these needed reforms in the road laws and administration, in providing more adequate revenues and in devising methods of construction and maintenance adapted to the requirements of modern traffic.—Logan W. Page in World's Work.

HASKELL'S HIGHWAY PLAN.

Oklahoma Governor Advocates a State Good Roads Commission.

Governor Haskell said recently that he will recommend to the Oklahoma legislature, possibly at a special session, the creation of a state good roads commission and the office of state engineer and will favor the continuance of good roads from one county into another.

"The building of roads—that is, permanent and good roads," he said, "is quite as large an undertaking as building railroads. They should be of large extent and should not be stopped arbitrarily at the county line just because the authority of the county commissioners does not extend into the next county. The way to build our roads state wide is to create a good roads commission to act as a consulting board for the various sets of county commissioners. The engineer of the board would, in fact, be a state engineer, who would plan the best surveys for good roads from a state standpoint and lay the plans before the sets of county commissioners for approval and the voting of the necessary bonds to defray the expense by counties as must be done under the present good roads law. The only thing that the state can furnish is convict labor."

Sand-clay Roads in Kansas.

Sand-clay roads are made of those two materials, and in some parts of the south are held to be, for particular regions at least, more practicable than macadam. This construction is now being introduced in the sand hill country of Kansas, where the sandy roads have hindered agricultural development by imposing great difficulty on the transportation of farm products.

Garden City, which is in the sandy country, solved the transportation problem by building a sand-clay road through the hills south of that city. Before this road was built farmers had to haul their grain more than twenty-five miles by a roundabout way in order to reach a market that is only ten or twelve miles distant. The property owners of Hutchinson and McPherson counties are now considering the opening of a big territory that has been handicapped by heavy sand hill roads.

More Real Work Needed.

A good roads convention is always a helpful institution, but there are a great many people who would do well to spend more time in making roads instead of attending conventions.

How to Check Severe Coughing.

It is said that severe paroxysms of coughing may be arrested by giving the patient a table-spoonful of glycerin to a wineglass of hot milk.

the first year were not quite up to the usual standard, but they sufficed. Newmark's finesse cut in two the Czar's income of the second year. Orde rensed himself. With his old time energy he hurried the woods work until an especially big cut gave promise of recouping the losses of the year before. Newmark found himself struggling against a force greater than he had imagined it to be.

The end of the fourth year found Newmark puzzled. Orde had paid regularly the interest on his notes. How much he had been able to save toward the redemption of the notes themselves his partner was unable to decide.

What Orde regarded as petty annoyances had made the problem of paying for the California timber a matter of great difficulty. A pressure whose points of support he could not place was closing on him. Against this pressure he exerted himself. The margin of safety was not as broad as he had reckoned. But in any case, if worse came to worst, he could always mortgage the California timber for enough to make up the difference, and more. Against this expedient, however, he opposed a sentimental obstinacy. It was Bobby's, and he objected to incumbering it.

Affairs stood thus in the autumn before the year the notes would come due. Navigation remained open into November. No severe storms had swept the lakes. The barge and her two tows had made one more trip than had been thought possible.

The weather continued so mild that Orde decided that they take on a load for Jones & Mulley of Chicago.

"Don't intend to ship by rail," said he. "They're all 'uppers,' so it would pay all right. But we can save all kinds of money by water, and they ought to skip over there in twelve to fifteen hours."

Orde departed for the woods to start the cutting as soon as the first belated snow should fall.

To Newmark, sitting at his desk after Orde's departure, reported Captain Floyd of the steam barge North Star.

"All loaded by noon, sir," he said.

Newmark looked up in surprise.

"Well, why do you tell me?" he inquired.

"I want your orders."

"My orders? Why?"

"This is a bad time of year," explained Captain Floyd, "and the storm signal's up. All the signs are right for a blow."

Newmark whirled in his chair.

"Are you afraid?" he sneered.

Captain Floyd's countenance burned a dark red.

"I only want your orders," was all he said. "I thought we might wait to see."

"Then go," snapped Newmark. "You heard Mr. Orde's orders to sail as soon as you were loaded."

Captain Floyd went out.

Newmark arose and looked out of the window. From the government's flagpole he caught the flash of red from the lazily floating signal. He was little weather-wise, and he shook his head skeptically. Nevertheless it was a chance, and he took it, as he had taken a great many others.

SUMMER HEADACHE.

How to Relieve It by Use of Fresh Mint Leaves.

Though mint may certain joyful luxuries has been known to give many a summer headache, it is also a cure for it, according to one sufferer. A woman was much troubled with headache that came from heat. She tried many remedies unsuccessfully until an old colored woman told her of a cure much used among southern negroes.

Fresh mint leaves are gathered, crushed into a juicy mass and bound across the head with a handkerchief. Relief quickly follows. This is due, thinks the woman, to the soothing color of the mint as much as to any healing qualities. Soon after the poultice was applied she dropped into a refreshing sleep and nearly awoke cured. In very severe cases the woman mixed a little witch hazel with the mint in crushing it.

How to Bake With a Gas Range.

The oven of a gas range is better than the old fashioned coal range, which accounts for the difficulty sometimes encountered by beginners in their use in successfully and evenly baking. To obtain the best results for baking loaf cakes, etc., the oven should not be heated more than five minutes before using, but it should be heated five minutes, and when the baking is begun a moderate heat should be maintained. A full realization that the heat in a gas range is direct and certain and easily controlled will bring success to the user. Once you know how long it takes and what degree of heat to cook an article you will never again make a failure if you are careful to watch the time.

IT'S QUALITY THAT COUNTS

When buying that fence for your farm don't be misled into getting a poor fence because it costs a little less per rod. You'll be sick of your bargain by the end of the first season. You'll wish you had considered quality instead of price.

PEERLESS WOVEN WIRE FENCE

is built to stand many seasons of hard usage. Made of hard steel galvanized wire that will not rust out and break.

The cross-bars are all of one piece, and give upright stability to the fence. The knot is so attached as not to injure any of the wires, can not slip, and yet permits the fence to be erected on a two-degree angle. The wires are all the same length—uniform heavy throughout and there are no bags or sags or pockets in Peerless. Make your dealer furnish Peerless—accept no substitute.

Neighborhood Notes

Gilbert Hopkins of Benzonia has been arrested charged with stealing records of the treasurer's office of Benzie county. The alleged theft occurred in 1905, a few months after Hopkins had vacated the office of county treasurer, and while arrangements were being made for an expert audit of the county's books.

Prosecutor M. G. Paul has been at work on the case since he came into office and a warrant was issued about a month ago. He waived examination and was bound over to circuit court for trial, furnishing bonds of $1,000. This action will reopen a somewhat celebrated case and some interesting evidence bearing upon county affairs is looked for. William Hogg, who was county treasurer at the time now is under bonds, awaiting trial on a charge of embezzeling funds of a bonding company.

A committee consisting of Messrs. A. S. Culbertson, F. M. Parmalee, John Otis, and G. H. Fitch went to South Boardman, Tuesday, to confer with Anderson & Co., proprietors of a large saw mill plant there, in regard to moving their outfit to this village. This firm has an option on several hundred acres of the Ward timber in this township and will know definitely this spring as to the acceptance of their bid, and if they get it desire to move their extensive plant nearer to their source of timber supply. They employ about 150 men which would give a decided boom to labor in this village. The firm will cut its last stick of timber in the woods in a few days and expect to finish sawing lumber in their mill in August.

CLEANING CHINA AND GLASS.

How to Care For Fine Dishes and Delicate Glassware.

Ordinary everyday china may be washed first in hot soapsuds, then in a clear rinsing water, and dried with soft, clean dish towels. A housekeeper should watch her maid carefully to see if her methods of dishwashing are approved. She should provide her maid with a hand mop, a half dozen good dishcloths, a soapsuds maker—that is, a small receptacle to hold the odds and ends of soap, which, when shaken in the hot water, will create a whole pailful of suds—and two dishpans, one for washing and one for rinsing. The maid must learn, and she usually does by bitter experience, that to put delicate glassware into scalding hot water means death and destruction to the glassware. The same thing will happen if hot tea is poured into a cold and brittle teacup. This causes sudden expansion, and the piece cracks either under the glaze or quite through it. It is a simple matter either to warm the cups by pouring in a little warm water or by putting them in a warm oven for a moment or, better still, by pouring the tea over a silver spoon resting on the cup.

The heaviest cut glass cracks under a change of temperature. An ice cream dish of this costly ware was once split in half while the mold of ice cream was being helped. Inquiry at the factory disclosed the fact that the sudden fall of temperature, combined with the pressure in cutting the ice cream, had caused the accident. Had the dish been set in the refrigerator a little while before the ice cream had been served it would never have split in half. In washing cut glass, therefore, place it in warm water first before putting it in the hot soapsuds.

When cleansing delicate and costly china strong soaps and soap powders should be avoided. They will surely eat into the gilding and decorations. Either ammonia or borax is safer. In arranging handsome china on the shelves soft mats should be placed between the plates to avoid scratches and nicks. The cups should be hung by their handles from hooks. This is much safer than piling them up on the shelves. Platters should rest lengthwise in a groove on the back of the shelf.

In washing handsome glass and china there should always be an exceedingly soft cloth to be used for a polisher after the piece has been dried with the usual dishcloth. In washing ordinary china it will be found that the hotter the water the easier the pieces are to dry and the shinier they will be.

SIMPLE MILK TEST.

How to Determine In a Few Minutes Quality of the Fluid.

The following process for the detection of added water or of skimmilk in ordinary milk is more accurate than the simple use of a lactodensimeter without the creammeter check. The whole test can be made in five minutes.

The result does not show whether the adulteration consisted in the addition of water or in the substraction of cream, but as a rule this matters little to the consumer. What he wants to know is whether or not he got what he paid for.

The suspected milk is stirred with a spoon in order to disseminate into the whole liquid the cream which may have come to the surface. Then one volume of milk is poured into fifty volumes of water—one third ounce to two and one-half pints.

A candle is lighted in a dark room. The experimenter takes an ordinary drinking glass with a flat and even bottom and holds it immediately above the candle at a distance of about one foot from it, so as to be able to see the flame of the candle through the bottom of the glass. He then pours slowly the diluted milk into the glass.

The flame becomes less and less bright as the level of the liquid rises into the glass. The flame is soon reduced to a dull white spot. A little more liquid slowly added so as to avoid pouring an excess and the flame becomes absolutely invisible. All that remains to be done is to measure the height of the liquid in the glass, this being most conveniently ascertained by slipping into it a strip of pasteboard and then measuring the wet part. It should measure not over an inch if the milk is pure.

With good quality milk diluted and tested as stated the depth will be about seven-eighths of an inch before the flame is lost to view. A mixture of one volume of milk and half a volume of water should show a depth at one and one-half inches. A depth of two inches indicates either partially skimmed milk or a mixture of one volume of good milk with one of water.—Scientific American.

WASHING OF AUTOMOBILES.

How to Preserve Original Beautiful Luster on the Cars.

How to retain the original beautiful luster of his automobile is a question that interests every motorist, for the owner of a car is usually very finicky about its appearance.

Some automobilists complain that the use of soap has resulted in the streaking and marring of the painted surface of their cars. Edward C. Hahn of Philadelphia, who has made a study of the subject of keeping motorcars in a perpetual condition of newness, says that the paint on an automobile can be preserved indefinitely if the soap is dissolved and applied in semiliquid form instead of in its raw state.

In large garage and automobile conveyors, where the washing of cars is an important part of each day's work, much unnecessary expense is incurred through a mistaken idea of the means required to get the lather to a proper consistency. Employees of these establishments as well as owners who wash their own cars act on the assumption that it is necessary to use a large piece of soap on a sponge to get the desired lather.

Mr. Hahn suggests that a better and decidedly more economical method is to dissolve twenty pounds of soap in twenty-five gallons of water and to use this solution with water as occasion demands. He figures that a saving of 25 per cent will result in the soap bills of these garages and automobile companies.

WILL E. HAMPTON IS THE CHOICE

Of Both Republican and Labor Parties at Caucus

FOR MAYOR OF CITY OF CHARLEVOIX

Oluf Nordrum Only New Candidate for Alderman

Dutton for Clerk, Alcock for Treasurer. Old Supervisors and Aldermen Complete Ticket.

The Republican city convention held at the court house Thursday, was a very harmonious meeting, everybody feeling they had gathered to name the next officials of the city. The convention was called to order by N. R. Washburn, chairman of the city convention, and Dr. R. B. Armstrong was elected permanent chairman, and Lisle Shanahan secretary, after which the following committees were appointed:

Credentials—Hon. R. W. Paddock, L. E. Benton, A. A. Hanshew.

Resolutions—Harry Nichols, W. J. Rachow, Albert E. Mason.

After a short recess the committee on credentials reported the following named gentlemen entitled to seats in the convention:

First Ward—R. W. Paddock, S. A. Marting, Harry Nicholls, A. M. Wilkinson, Andrew Ross.

Second Ward—G. Ellsworth Dutton, O. D. Hammond, W. J. Rachow, A. A. Hanshew, Lisle Shanahan.

Third Ward—R. B. Armstroog, Harrison Berdan, Harry Widdifield, Albert E. Mason, L. E. Benton.

O. D. Hammond and S. A. Marting were appointed tellers and on nominations for mayor being called for Dr. A. M. Wilkioson presented the name of Will E. Hampton, speaking of his long acquaintance, the work which he had done for the city, having always been found at the front in everything that would promote the welfare of the city. A ballot was then taken, Mr. Hampton receiving the unanimous vote of the convention.

The name of G. Ellsworth Dutton was presented to the convention by R. W. Paddock, for city clerk and Andrew Ross performed a like service for Art Allcock, for city treasurer, both of whom received the unanimous vote of the convention.

E. B. Ward and Lisle Shanahan likewise were chosed chairman and secretary of the city committee.

Mr. Hamplon appeared before the convention, and in a short address, thanked them for the honor and pledged himself if elected to, as always, work for the best interests of the city as he saw it and not to be swayed by any other interests than the good of all.

Ward caucuses were held Wednesday night with the following results:

First Ward
- Alderman—A. A. Swinton.
- Supervisor—F. J. Meech.
- Constable—Percy Maraa.

Second Ward
- Alderman—Oluf Nordrum.
- Supervisor—Charles Zeltler.
- Constable—John Miller.

Third Ward
- Alderman—Charles Carey.
- Supervisor—W. H. Miller.
- Constable—Oscar Mason.

Mr. Carey declined the nomination for alderman and the name of G. C. Geiken was placed upon the ticket by the committee.

The Labor party caucuses were held Saturday night, but the members of that organization, expressed themselves as so well pleased with the ticket nominated by the former caucuses, as composed of men who, they were satisfied, would labor for the very best intcrests of the city and this being the case, the object of their organization—the securing of good municipal officers, without regard to parisanship—was accomplished, the republican nominations were ratified.

The following gentlemen were chosen as the city committee:

First Ward—Henry Sherman.
Second Ward—Ed Stewart.
Third Ward—S. A. Brown.

VANPELT BOYS CLUBS

Will Show What Charlevoix can do In Raising Corn

Good Chance for Boys in Granges to get Busy this Summer.

The last number of the State Grange Lecturer's Bulletin contained the following in regard to a line of work which has been very successfully carried out in other portions of the state and while never inangerated in this county, the matter has been discussed.

Now, however, George H. Van Pelt, a member of Norwood grange, and who is always found at the front in advancing the interests of this county, makes the following offer: That a club be formed of ten or more boys between the ages of ten and eighteen, to be known as the Van Pelt Boy's Corn Club, also a club known as the Van Pelt Boy's Orchard Club. Mr. Van Pelt will give a prize of $25 to the boy who raises the best acre of corn during the season of 1911, this season to be devoted to forming the club, preparing the soil and reading up on the subject. In addition Mr. Van Pelt will live years from now give $50 to the boy who sets out and has in best shape an acre of orchard. The boys in this club to be known as Van Pelt's Orchard Club.

The article in the bulletin is as follows:

"At every turn this past season, in institutes and in conference with grange workers, the idea has been prominent that contests for boys and girls are valuable. "In three years, perhaps in less time," warned one judge in talking on corn displays at a large institute, "the boys will be ahead of you men. They listen to our instructions and follow them out better in practice."

One institute was packed at every meeting with old and young, and the boys and girls gave as close attention as the gray-beards—because it was their institute as much as anyone's. Very much careful thought had been put into the contest at that place, but the results paid. I want to impress the thought that it pays every time to work with these young people, and to raise the question seriously. Are we doing all we should with them in our granges? Instead of money prizes, why not offer a trip to M. A. C., or attendance at the Corn or Dairy school for one week? Any grange might offer something of this sort for genuine effort among its young people in one of various lines."

Now is the time to get busy in the granges. Pick your boy to become a member of the club, offer some of the minor prizes spoken of by Miss Buell and make the project one that will boom Charlevoix county.

LAST CHANCE NEXT MONDAY

For Enrollment to Vote at September Primary

FOR NOMINATION OF PUBLIC OFFICIALS

Questions to Be Submitted This Spring

Are Important Both in City and County—Republican Ticket a Good One—Vote Against Board of Works.

The coming election, next Monday, is of equal importance to the contest of last spring when the people of Charlevoix county drove the saloons from our midst. Although of nearly equal far reading importance, public interest needs to be aroused so a full vote will be cast and a full enrollment made on election day.

The questions to be submitted to the people of the county, whether they desire to nominate party candidates for circuit judge and county officers by direct vote will mean a complete revolution in the conduct of political affairs in this county.

If you are satisfied with the convention system, if you believe that the naming of your officials should be placed in the hands of the few who, by their skill in the manipulation of conventions, have been placed in a position of leadership, then vote No on the proposition. If on the other hand, you believe that every man who asks the people for their votes at an election should be equally frank and should ask the people for their votes for nomination, then vote Yes.

Probably, no occasion exists in this county, at the present time to criticize the choice of our officials as made by party conventions, few counties having a better staff of officers. Everyone, if they decide to become candidates for re-election, being willing and ready to go before the people and give them account of their stewardship and accept their verdict—we know, from past experience that these conditions are not always present and by the adoption of the direct nomination system the people are in possession of a power which they can use if the need arises.

Party enrollment must be made April 4, if you are not already enrolled. No other opportunity will be presented before the September primaries and if you do not enroll next Monday you forfeit your right to take part in the primaries. Here again, carefully consider before enrolling. If you believe that the best interests of the county will be served by the nomination and election of Republican officials, enroll as a Republican. If you believe that it is better to nominate and work for the election of Democratic, Socialist or any other party or issue enroll that way, but always keep in view the best interests of Charlevoix county.

In the city two tickets are presented to the people, Republican and Socialist. The Republican ticket is made of members of all parties and was nominated at the Republican convention and ratified at the Labor Party convention by men who believed that partisanship had no part in a city election.

Mr. Hampton, who heads the ticket is conceded by everybody to be an energetic man who always does his whole duty in any position in which he is placed. A man of splendid business ability, as is needed at the head of our city. The other candidates on the city ticket are equally strong.

In the wards all the candidates for supervisor and alderman but Mr. Nordrum, whose qualifications need not be enumerated, are the present officials and we challenge any criticisim of their official acts.

The Socialist candidates are also well-known and nothing can be be said against them as good citizens.

Another important question is the abolishment of the Board of Public Works. We believe that the folly of two governing bodies and divided responsibility has been fully demonstrated and the people will vote yes on this proposition.

NOT A MISER, BUT ALMONER.

Spinster Who Pretended to Be in Poverty a Philanthropist Too.

That true philanthropy had in late years of her life vied with an eccentricity for hoarding gold in odd places about her home developed recently during the investigation of the affairs of Miss Elizabeth A. Hays of Burlington, N. J., who died suddenly the other night at the age of eighty-six years, supposedly poor, but since found to have left a $100,000 estate.

Close friends of the aged woman who were in her confidence except as to the extent of her wealth said that she had given away thousands of dollars in the last twenty years among needy families in Burlington county. Miss Hays continued to profess poverty before those to whom she openly gave assistance, and they believed until her death that she was actually as poor as she professed to be and was making a heroic personal sacrifice to aid them.

The old farmhouse has been closely guarded since a lawyer and heirs the other day found fifteen different lots of gold coin and banknotes hidden in books, cupboards, old boxes, beds and in many odd places. It is asserted that approximately $10,000 in cash was found, with mortgages for $20,000 and deeds for $50,000 worth of property.

Neighbors say that search of the old house since the death of Miss Hays has revealed an odd assortment of heirlooms and valuable antiques. They say that eighteen old spinning wheels were found covered with dust in the attic. Several of these are of solid mahogany.

Much old mahogany furniture, most of it given her by deceased relatives, is stored in the rooms on the second floor of the old house. Many old silk gowns and a seemingly unlimited supply of rare old laces and embroideries, most of them yellow with age, have been among the discoveries resulting from the second search. Old gold coins and banknotes are said to have been hidden even among these heirlooms.

It is likely that a fortune will be gained from the old coins alone. Hundreds of these of rare mintage, both domestic and foreign, were found mixed in with modern gold eagles and double eagles. State Senator Griffith W. Lewis, president of a local bank and coin collector and expert, has been called into consultation by Executor Brunch to pass upon the value of these old pieces.

PLANTS MADE TO ORDER.

Radium Rays Are Tried to Create New Varieties of Flora.

Plants in the future may be made to order, according to Professor C. Stuart Gager of the College of Agriculture, who for the last two years has been experimenting with radium in the agricultural laboratories of the University of Missouri, at Columbia, Mo.

An entirely new species of primrose has been originated by the use of radium, and it has held true to the new form through three generations of the plant. The color of the flower was changed and the leaves changed from broad to narrow. In addition to creating new species it is possible either to accelerate or retard the growth of seeds and plants by exposing them to the action of the radium rays.

Siberian Traders Ask Government to Help Save Trade.

The greatest market in the world for undressed furs, held at the Irbit fair, Siberia, where hunters' guilds and traders and buyers' associations meet annually, recently took an important step. Meeting Requirements.

[Telephone companies all over the country have made a law barring all girls from employment as operators unless they are at least five feet tall.—Evidence Before United States Senate.]

Her voice was like the singing
Of birds among the trees
When to a party ringing
She asked, "What number, please?"
None heard but to admire her,
All hearts she held in thrall,
But, alas, they had to fire her,
For she wasn't five feet tall.

Her record showed them plainly
That she was most adept,
But, ah, she pleaded vainly
And then broke down and wept.
She wore high heels that made her
Much taller to the eye,
But at last her walk betrayed her—
She wasn't five feet high.

And so they sacked her, gasping,
And now there's in her place
A maid whose voice is rasping,
Who has a sour, dour face.
She's cross, she's rude, she's snappy,
When her subscribers call,
But the company is happy,
For she's more than five feet tall.

Chapter 30

To Carroll's delight, Orde returned unexpectedly from the woods late that night. He was so busy these days that she welcomed any chance to see him.

After breakfast Carroll accompanied her husband to the front door. When they opened it a blast of air rushed in, whirling some dead leaves with it.

"I guess the flue weather's over," said Orde, looking up at the sky.

A dull lead color had succeeded the soft gray. The heavens seemed to have settled down closer to the earth. Whirlwinds scurried among the dead leaves on the lawns, chasing them madly around in circles.

"Winter's coming," shivered Carroll.

Carroll resolved to take a drive, as she enjoyed blustery weather. She stopped for Mina Heinzmun, and the two walked around to the stable, where the men harnessed old Prince into the phaeton.

They entered Main street, where there was a great banging and clanging of swinging signs and a few loose shutters. All the sidewalk displays of vegetables and other goods had been taken in, and the doors, customarily wide open, were now shut fast.

"I wonder where all the farmers' wagons are?" marveled the practical Mina. "Surely they would not stay home Saturday afternoon just for this wind!"

Opposite Randall's hardware store her curiosity quite mastered her.

"Do stop!" she urged Carroll. "I want to run in and see what's the matter."

She was gone but a moment and returned, her eyes shining with excitement.

"Oh, Carroll," she cried, "there are three vessels gone ashore off the piers! Everybody's gone to see."

"Jump in," said Carroll. "We'll drive out. Perhaps they'll get out the life saving crew."

Carroll drove straight ahead until Prince stood at the top of the plank road that led down to the bathhouses. Here she pulled up.

Carroll saw the lake, slate blue and angry, with whitecapped billows to the limit of vision. Along the shore were rows and rows of breakers, leaping, breaking and gathering again. These did not look to be very large until she noticed the twin piers reaching out from the river's mouth. Each billow as it came in rose sullenly above them, broke tempestuously to overwhelm the entire structure of their ends and ripped lashore along their lengths, the crest submerging as it ran every foot of the massive structures.

"Look there—out farther!" pointed Mina.

Three little toy ships—or so they seemed compared to the mountains of water—lay broadside to just inside the farthest line of breakers. Two were sailing schooners. These had been thrown on their beam ends, their masts pointing at an angle toward the beach. Each wave broke in a deluge of water that covered their hulls completely from sight. With a mighty suction the billow drained away, carrying with it wreckage. The third vessel was a steam barge. The shoreward side of her upper works had given away first, so now the interior of her staterooms and saloons was exposed to view as in the cross section of a model ship. Over her, too, the great waves hurled themselves, each carrying away its spoil.

"Poor fellows!" cried Mina.

"What?" asked Carroll.

"Don't you see them?" queried the other.

Carroll looked, and in the rigging of the schooner she made out a number of black objects.

"Are those men up the masts?" she cried.

"Are those men up the masts?"

She set Prince in motion toward the beach.

At the foot of the bluff the plank road ran out into the deep sand. Through this the phaeton made its way heavily. Already the beach was strewn with pieces of wreckage. The crowd gathered at the pier comprised fully half the population of Monrovia. It centered about the life saving crew, whose mortar was being loaded. A stove-in lifeboat mutely attested the failure of other efforts. When the preparations were finished their chief aimed the mortar and pulled the string. The dart with its trailer of line rose on a long, graceful curve. The reel sang. But the resistance of the wind and the line early made itself felt. Slower and slower hummed the reel. By a good 300 yards the shot failed to carry over the vessels.

"There's Mr. Bradford," said Carroll, waving her hand. "Couldn't they get the lifeboats out to them?" she asked as he approached.

"No."

"But surely they will never get a line over with the mortar!" said Carroll. "That last shot fell so far short!"

"They know it. They've shot a dozen times."

At this moment from the river a trail of black smoke became visible over the point of sand still that ran down to the pier. A smokestack darted into view, slowed down and came to rest well inside the river channel. There it rose and fell on the swell. The crowd uttered a cheer.

"Come and see what's up," suggested Bradford.

He hitched Prince to a log and led the way to the pier.

The Sprite was lying close under the pier. Harvey, the negro engineer, leaned against the sill of his little square door, smoking his pipe.

"I wouldn't go out there for a million dollars!" cried a man excitedly. "Nothing on earth could live in that sea!"

"What are they going to do?" asked Carroll.

"Haven't you heard?" cried the other. "This is one of Orde's tugs, and she's going to try to get a line to them vessels."

Bradford turned abruptly and brushed toward the tug, followed by Carroll and Mina. At the edge of the pier was the tug's captain, Marsh, listening to earnest expostulation by a half dozen of the leading men of the town, among whom were both Newmark and Orde.

"Gentlemen," said he crisply, "I'm entirely willing to take all personal risks. The thing is hazardous, and it's Mr. Orde's tug. It's for him to say whether he wants to risk her."

"Good Lord, man, what's the tug in a case like this!" cried Orde.

"I thought so," replied Captain Marsh. "I'll take her out if I can get a crew. Harvey, step up here."

The engineer hoisted his long figure through the doorway.

"Harvey," said Captain Marsh briskly, "we're going to try to get a line aboard those vessels. It's dangerous. Will you go?"

"You all goin', suh?" he asked.

"Of course."

"I reckon I'll done half to go, too," said Harvey simply. He swung lightly back to the uneasy craft below him.

"I want a man with me at the wheel, two to handle the lines and one to fire for Harvey," said Captain Marsh.

"That's our job," announced the life saving captain.

"Well, come on, then."

Captain Marsh shook the hand which Orde, stooping, offered him.

"I'll try to bring her back all right, sir," said he.

"To h— with the tug!" cried Orde "Bring yourself back!"

Marsh entered the pilothouse.

"Cast off!" he cried. The "jangler" called for full speed ahead.

"Brave chaps! Brave chaps!" said Dr. McMullen to Carroll. "But, do you know, to my mind, the bravest of them all are that nigger and his fireman nailed down in the hold where they can't see nor know what's going on."

The tug had rounded the end of the pier. The first of her thousand enemies, sweeping in from the open, had struck her fair.

"She can stand that, all right," said one of the life saving crew. "But wait till she drops down to the vessels."

The Sprite was now so distant that the loom of the great seas swallowed her from view save when she rose on the crest of some mighty billow.

"There, she's turned now!" cried some one.

Beneath the trail of black smoke she had shifted direction. With startling swiftness the Sprite darted out of the horizon into full view. For the first time the spectators realized the size and weight of the seas. One moment the whole of her deck was visible, the next her bow alone showed high as the back suction caught her and dragged her into the hollow. A sea rose behind. Nothing of the tug was to be seen. It seemed that no power could prevent her being overwhelmed. Yet somehow always she staggered out of the gulf until she was again cast forward like a chip.

"Maybe they ain't catchin' p'ticular h— at that wheel to hold her from yawing," muttered the tug captain.

The Sprite rushed at the outer line of breakers. The comers crested and fell with a roar. Just as in milder weather the surf breaks on the beach. A woman in the crowd screamed. But at the edge of destruction the Sprite came to a shuddering stop. Her powerful propellers had been set to the reverse. Thus she hovered on the edge of the breakers, awaiting her chance. If one of the waves should happen to crest and break, the water, catching the tug on her flat stern deck, would indubitably bury her. The situation was awful in its extreme simplicity. Would Captain Marsh see his opportunity before the law of chances would bring along the wave that would overwhelm him?

Two or three of the townsmen walked up and down. One woman prayed aloud in short hysterical sentences.

"O God, save them! O Lord.

Orde stood on top of a half buried log, his entire being concentrated on the maneuver being executed. Only Newmark apparently remained as calm as ever.

Suddenly, without warning, occurred one of those inexplicable lulls that interpose often amid the wildest uproars. Between two waves the Sprite darted forward directly for the nearest of the wrecks.

"She'll collide!" some one shrieked.

But the tug swerved and turned on a long diagonal across the end of the bar.

Marsh had chosen his moment with exactitude. He had taken advantage of the brief lull of jumbled seas after the "three largest waves" had swept by. Yet in shallow water and with the strong inshore set, even that lull was all too short. The Sprite was staggered by the breakers; her speed was checked; her stern was dragged around. She tore herself from the grasp of the current. Enveloped in a blinding hail of spray, she struggled desperately to extricate herself before the resumption of the larger seas should roll her over to destruction. Already these larger seas were racing in from the open.

Far out in the lake against the tumbling horizon Carroll saw heave up for a second the shoulder of a mighty wave. And instinctively she perceived this wave as a deadly enemy of the little tug and saw it heading all its great energies to hurrying in on time to catch the victim before it could escape. Her whole being was concentrated in a continually shifting calculation of the respective distances between the tug and the piers, the tug and the relentlessly advancing wave.

"Oh, go!" she exhorted the Sprite under her breath.

Huge and towering, the wave came on now calmly and deliberately. The Sprite was off the end of the pier when the wave lifted her, just in the position her enemy would have selected to crush her life out against the cribs. Slowly the tug rose against its shoulder, was lifted onward, poised and then with a swift forward thrust the wave broke, smothering the pier and lighthouse beneath tons of water.

A low, agonized wail broke from the crowd. And then—and then—over beyond the pier they saw gliding a battered black stack from which still poured defiantly clouds of gray smoke.

The Sprite was safe.

"I wonder if she got the line aboard," speculated the tugboat captain at last.

The crowd surged over to the piers again. Below them rose and fell the Sprite. All the fancy scrollwork of her upper works, the cornice of her deck house, the light rigging of her cabin, had disappeared. The tall smokestack was bent awry.

At sight of Marsh the crowd set up a yell. He paid no attention. One of the life saving men tossed a mooring line ashore. It was seized by a dozen men. Then for the first time somebody noticed that, although the tug had come to a standstill, her screw was still turning slowly over and over, holding her against the erratic strong jerk-ing of a slender rope that ran through her stern chocks and into the water.

"She'll collide!" some one shrieked.

"He got it aboard!" yelled the man, pointing.

Another cheer broke out.

The life saving crew took charge. It was necessary to pass the line around the end of the pier and back to the beach. This was a dangerous job and one requiring considerable power and ingenuity, for the strain on the line imposed by the waters was terrific, and the breaking seas rendered work on the piers extremely hazardous.

A number of the curious lingered about the Sprite. Marsh and Orde were in consultation over the smashed stern. Harvey leaned out his little square door.

"No," he answered a query. "I wasn't what you all would call scairt—that is, not really scairt—jess a little ne'vous. All I had to do was to feed

"They were ours," he said her slabs and listen for my bell. You see, Cap'n Ma'sh, he was in cha'ge."

"No, sir," Captain Marsh was saying emphatically to his employer, "I can't figure it out except on one thing. You see, it's stove from underneath. A sea would have smashed it from above. That last sea must 've lifted us bodily right over the corner of the pier."

"Well, maybe," assented Orde doubtfully.

"Sure thing," repeated Marsh, with conviction.

"Well, you'd better not tell 'em so unless you want to rank in with old man Ananias," ended Orde.

The wild and picturesque work of rescue was under way. The line had been successfully brought to the left of the lighthouse. To it had been attached the rope and to that the heavy cable. These the crew of the schooner had dragged out and made fast to a mast. The stove end passed over a tall scissors. When the cable was tightened the breeches buoy was put into commission, and before long the first member of the crew was hauled ashore, plunging in and out of the waves as the rope tightened or slackened. He was a flaxen haired Norwegian. The crew and its volunteers worked quickly. Carroll and Mina stayed until dusk and later, watching the long heavy labor of rescue. The women making the hot coffee found their services becoming valuable. Big fires of driftwood were ignited. They were useful for light as well as warmth.

Orde discovered the two girls and drew Carroll one side.

"You'd better go home now, sweet-

WE can see no reason why any voter in this city should vote against the ticket nominated by Republican and ratified by the Labor party. Every supervisor and every alderman, with the exception of Alderman Crane, who was not a candidate, were nominated. The work of the three supervisors has always been such that their wards, and the whole city and county, have been well served.

The present council has been a working body. They have straightened out several matters and to change the council now before their work is completed would be a detriment to the welfare of this city. Mr. Nordrum, the candidate in the second, has had experience on the council of our neighboring city, Petoskey, and is just the kind of a man that is needed to work with the other members, for we need a city government conducted by the best business men in the city and Mr. Nordrum is in that class.

The city ticket is equally strong. Mr. Hampton, it is conceded by everybody, would make an ideal presiding officer, one who would keep things moving. He has been in official positions in this city before, and has made good and more than good in them all. His associates are equally strong. With no opposition except from the Socialists, who have good men on their ticket, but who if elected, would mean a entire corps of new men to take charge which would mean start all over again, while the present body has the work well in hand, and as a working body has made a new record for the city government.

The Local Political Situation. A Few Remarks by Fred H. Thomas.

Why should not all laboring men vote the Socialist ticket at the coming city election? But I have heard a prominent business man say, "What do you mean by laboring men? Are we not all laboring men? Do not the business men of Charlevoix work as long hours and as hard as most working men?" Yes we admit it. But Socialists claim that there is some difference between the man who works at some productive, or at least some useful labor, and the man who works, perhaps just as hard and just as faithfully trying to get possession of as much as possible of what the other fellow has produced, and give the least possible in return. Of course we realize that much useless and improductive labor is necessary as long as the present capitalistic system remains and we also realize that most of the small business men, those doing business on small capital, and perhaps that all borrowed, properly belong in the Socialist party, judging from the economic standpoint alone, to say nothing of the other advantages that would be theirs under the co-operative commonwealth, because the returns for a day's labor under co-operation, with all waste and useless labor eliminated, would be many times what most small business men now receive. Some will probably say "Why don't Thomas practice what he preaches, Is he not trying to make a profit off of other men's labor?" Yes I will admit it. But as long as such a large majority uphold the profit system, and vote for it year after year, I don't know that it ought to make much difference whether the profit, provided there is any, goes to a Socialist or a Republican, And I will say also, that while I am trying to make some money by paying men less for their labor than I get for it, I am at the same time doing all I can to bring about such a state of affairs that it will be impossible for one person to compel another person to "divide up" the product of his or her labor, I realize very well that it is not good business policy for me to be working for Socialism in Charlevoix just at the present time, but I am satisfied that any sacrifice that we may make now, will be amply repaid by the improved conditions that will prevail when ABSOLUTE JUSTICE for ALL shall be established in the co-operative commonwealth.

The Charlevoix Sentinel says "We know of no local issues that are worthy of the name" and "There is no principle involved that in any way affects labor interests, and the Socialists are in the field on general principles to make a local record.

We are very glad to be told by such high authority that the Republicans are asking for votes for no other reason only that they are Republicans, But the Socialists object very emphatically to being mentioned in the same class with those who have no other reason for voting as they do, only to be on the winning side.

There are questions to be settled by the voters of this country that affect the interest of the workers very materially, and the only way to settle them right is to vote for and elect to office in every township, village, city, county, state, and in the nation, men, who will enact and enforce laws favorable to the working class. The Socialist party is the only party that you can depend on for this work as all other parties are financed and controlled by capitalists, and of course you would not expect them to do otherwise than to protect the capitalists in their robbery of the people. And then the Socialist party is the only party that has a system in use for controlling the actions of members of the party after they are elected to office (perhaps I am wrong about this, I rather think that the capitalists do have a way of controlling the lawmakers of the other parties.) Every man nominated to office on the Socialist ticket signs his resignation of the office, with the date left blank, and if he does not act in harmony with the principles of the party the resignation is dated and filed with the proper authorities.

You will find that the Socialist party is always and everywhere the workingmen's party, and I challenge any person to point to any act of the Socialist party anywhere, that has not been intended to benefit the working people.

So you see we have nothing to offer the capitalists along the line of increased returns on capital invested, but on the contrary I think that we can safely guarantee that within a few years there will be NO returns on privately owned capital, but that the product of all labor will go to the laborers. And there will be "nothing to arbitrate" either By laborers we of course do not mean manual labor alone, but every kind of labor necessary to provide the necessaries and luxuries of life. The only improvements we have to offer the capitalists is a better state of society in which to live, and I am sure they will appreciate that. There are always some working men who are afraid they will "lose their vote" by voting the Socialist ticket, because the Socialists might not be elected, and they want to be on the winning side. It seems to me that it ought to be more satisfactory, as Carl Thompson said in his speech at Charlevoix, to "vote for what we want even if we don't get it right away, than to vote for what we don't want and get it at once."

The result of the Republican caucuses, was something of a surprise to the Socialists.

They tell us that we ought not to let politics enter into city matters in a small town like Charlevoix, (perhaps that is good advice with relation to Republican politics,) and it is evident that some are taking their own advice quite seriously. We realize of course that the time is near at hand when there will be only the Socialist party and the capitalist party, (probably still called the Republican party), in the field, but we did not expect to see the lifelong Democrats joining with the Republican party quite so soon in Charlevoix in order to be able to defeat the Socialists. But of coure "There's a reason." Perhaps the Democrats think that there ARE local issues in the present local campaign. Then again perhaps the Republicans could not find enough men in their own party that they considered competent to fill the offices.

Well in conclusion let me say, if you are satisfied with the present industrial conditions vote for the Republican party. Perhaps they cannot make it any worse than they already have. But if you are willing to help to make it possible for you to get more and more of the products of your own labor, (or an equivalent amount of the product of other people's labor,) each year, and finally to establish the co-operative commonwealth, in which it will be impossible for one person, who is physically and mentally qualified to do some useful work to compel others to support him, then I ask you to vote the Socialist ticket straight, at the coming city election, and thus help to build up an organization that is struggling throughout the civilized world to accomplish the results mentioned above.

"Who is he?" queried the visitor, regarding the phenomenon closely.

The Majestic opens up Monday, April 4, under the management of Wallace Campbell, who is one of the oldest managers in the state. Manager Campbell puts up an Aerdome in Petoskey this summer, and by having both places, will be able to give us some of the best shows ever seen here.

Both acts that open here the first week, have worked for Manager Campbell before and he states they are among the best in their line. He has been in Chicago for the last two weeks, getting a line on the Actors that are to play here the coming season, and has bought an interest in one of the shows there, where all of the acts will be seen before they come north.

Besides this Manager Campbell owns one-half interest in the Eddie Russel Stock Co. and they will be here every third week. This puts Charlevoix in it this season as far as good shows go.

How to Preserve Leather Furniture.

Leather furniture needs constant and intelligent care to keep it from drying out and tearing into shreds or turning to powder. In the first place, don't be afraid to apply a little soap and water to it to wash off the dust and dirt. Use soapy water, a sponge and a paint brush to get into the folds of the leather and the crevices. The soapy water will darken the leather, but only temporarily. When the leather is dry here is a preparation that will do it good. It's simple—just one part sweet oil and four parts benzine. The oil will darken the leather a little, but it will soon dry in and leave it the original color. The surplus oil may be removed by rubbing. Rub into the grain of the leather. This treatment four times a year will preserve both the life and the elasticity of your leather furniture covering.

How to Keep an Iris Bed Sightly.

If you have a bed of iris that is a blot on your garden, while the withered stalks are laying up a store of nutriment for next year's bloom, it is well to plant something in between the plants that will make them look less unsightly.

In between the iris plants the seed of mignonette can be sown about the middle of April, and begonia superfloreur can also be used. These plants take less nutriment from the soil than taller-growing plants, as their root growth is shallow. They also do well in the partial shade that is needed for iris.

ADULTERATION OF MILK.

A Missouri reader of these notes writes inquiring if there is any simple and correct way of ascertaining whether sweet milk has been adulterated. In several states the pure food laws require that milk shall contain not less than 3 per cent of butter fat nor less than 12½ per cent of milk solids. The butter fat content is readily determined by the Babcock test, which is simply made by adding to a graduated test tube of the milk three or four drops of concentrated sulphuric acid, which causes the fatty content to separate as yellow butter oil and rise to the top of the tube, when the proportion it bears to the whole can be easily determined. If the butter fat content is less than 3 per cent there is good reason for believing that the milk has been adulterated or is from a mighty poor cow. The milk solids are readily determined by the Quevenne lactometer, and we are indebted to Professor Mortensen, director of the department of dairying at the State college at Ames, Ia., for the following directions for using it:

"Take a glass or tin cylinder one and a half inches in diameter and one inch high and fill about three-fourths full of the milk to be tested. The milk should be thoroughly mixed before the sample is taken and be at a temperature of 60 degrees F., though the reading may be taken from 50 to 70 degrees. The lactometer is placed in the milk and the reading taken after it has floated in the milk for a minute. At the same time there should be a reading of the temperature on the thermometer with which the lactometer is equipped. The total solids are ascertained by adding one and two-tenth thues the per cent of fat to one-fourth of the lactometer reading. For example, if the lactometer reading is 32 and the fat according to the Babcock test is 4 per cent the total solids would be equal to 4 × 1.2 plus 32 ÷ 4, or 4.8 plus 8, or 12.8. If the temperature of the milk is above 60 degrees F. one-tenth should be added to the lactometer reading for each degree above, and if the temperature is below 60 degrees one-tenth should be subtracted from the lactometer reading for each thermometer degree below. For example, if the lactometer reading at 65 degrees F. is 32 the corrected reading would be 32 plus five-tenths, or 32.5, and if the reading of the lactometer is 55 degrees five-tenths should be subtracted from 32, which would make the correct reading 31.5.

HOW TUBERCULIN IS MADE.

There seems to be an idea in the minds of some that the injection of tuberculin into the system of a cow which does not have tuberculosis may in some mysterious way develop the disease in her. This is a wrong idea, as will be understood from a description of the method of preparing the serum given below, taken from a bulletin recently published by Dr. C. H. Stange of the Iowa Agricultural college at Ames:

"A bouillon is prepared with beef or veal infusion containing from 4 to 6 per cent of glycerin. This is placed in flasks and sterilized treated to a temperature sufficient to kill all living organisms). It is then inoculated with a pure culture of the tubercle bacillus and kept in an incubator at 98 degrees F. In the course of a few weeks the tubercle bacilli will have formed a coarse granular scum on the surface. The contents of the flask are now poured into a porcelain dish and heated until evaporation reduces it to one-tenth of its volume. It is then filtered through a porcelain filter. The liquid passing through the filter is tuberculin. The heat required to concentrate the fluid before filtration is sufficient to kill all bacilli, while the filter removes all the dead bacilli. Tuberculin is therefore the bouillon in which the tubercle bacillus has been grown and contains the toxic material produced by its growth, but the heat to which the preparation is subjected effectively destroys all germ life."

CHEAP SEED CORN.

If reports from those parts of the corn belt which were visited by the killing October freeze are to be believed $10 is about the price which will be paid for seed corn showing an average test of 95 per cent. Buying seed corn at this figure is expensive business, but it comes a long way from being as expensive a proceeding as planting in good soil two dollar seed corn that will test but 50 per cent and that is neither good nor strong. In buying seed corn the coming spring it will be well to keep clearly in mind the fact that one bushel of good seed will plant seven acres, which even on the $10 basis makes the cost of seed per acre but $1.45. The question for the farmer to settle would seem to be whether the twenty to thirty bushels extra that he will get from planting seed that will grow are worth 75 cents.

The most wholesome influence that can come into the life of any person is a condition in which he is called upon to work for another. There is at once satisfaction and rest in such service.

Milk, sweet or sour, is a most valuable adjunct in the ration for the flock of hens and should be provided for them whenever possible. It furnishes them food elements in a form which they relish and which is at the same time easily digested and assimilated.

There is surely an African in the wood pile when the growers of potatoes get but 35 cents per bushel for their tubers f. o. b. in October and the consumer has to pay from $1.25 to $1.40 per bushel for the same article when they are delivered at his back door three months later by the local groceryman.

For all practical purposes—and this holds whether the animal be of the roadster or draft type—a horse is valuable in just the proportion that the feet and legs on which he stands are strong and sound. For this reason, in the judging of the merits of sire and dam and the worth of their get, this important point can be given hardly too much attention.

All too many farmers in the corn belt have yet to learn the several advantages coming from adopting a type of soil tillage which makes possible the growing of 1,000 bushels of corn on fifteen acres instead of sprawling it over forty or fifty acres. Such an agricultural reform would mean not only a vastly greater economy in the use and working of land and care of the crops, but a corresponding increase in satisfaction on the part of the proprietor.

One of the largest irrigation projects in the world has been under construction during the past year and a half on the Murrumbidgee river, in New South Wales. The dam, which is located at Barren Jack, will cost when completed $7,500,000 and will store water enough to irrigate and make available for settlement 1,378,000 acres of land. The cost of this dam is almost twice that of the celebrated Salt river dam, near Phoenix, Ariz., the largest enterprise of its kind in the United States.

Considering the difficulty which is often experienced in carrying the canna through so long a dormant period without serious impairment of vitality, it may be well to put the roots in soil in small pots or in a box large enough to accommodate several roots and place them in a rather cool, light room where the bulbs will sprout, but where their development will be slow. Later, as the time approaches when they may be transferred to the open ground, with the danger of frost past, they may be given warmer quarters.

A few crystals of potassium permanganate placed in the drinking water for the poultry make it an excellent disinfectant, which cleanses the mouth and throat and will kill germs of roup that may be present. If the nasal passages are badly affected relief will come from forcing into the nostrils a few drops of a 5 per cent solution of carbolic acid and a 5 per cent solution of copper sulphate mixed by means of a fine jointed oil can or atomizer. Besides this treatment, the sick fowls should be kept by themselves in a dry and well ventilated place.

There is no system or method of selecting public servants that will of itself insure the election of clean and honest men to office unless it is backed by voters who are alert, honest and actively interested in the problems of popular government. The primary election system, admittedly the best method of selecting officers yet tried, will not insure the election of the right men to office any more than a reaper will harvest grain without horses to pull it. Along this line the farmer, the tradesman and the professional man have an equal responsibility in the attainment of good government.

The black color of the surface soils found in many sections is due to the presence of humus, the decaying and decayed vegetable matter, the accumulation of many years. While soils are usually of a sandy character, red soil of decomposed granite or clay, while the gray soils often noticed in western states are composed of volcanic ash. While black soils are usually fat and rich in humus, in no sense do they surpass the red or gray soils when it comes to other fertilizing elements. True, they often lack nitrogen, but this deficiency is made good by the application of manures and the growing of legumes.

A query that naturally comes to one who feels an interest in the soil beneath his feet is that having to do with its origin. Subsequent to the epoch where the stuff of which the old earth was made "took form and substance" the earth masses were of rocky formation, but as a result of processes partly chemical and partly physical, extending through millions of years and including the work of heat and frost, of rain and snow, of flood and glacier, they were disintegrated and reduced to a fineness which made possible the nourishment of plant life. Before this disintegration of rock masses was far advanced vegetation appeared, helping in the further work of disintegration and adding to the rock soil the other element necessary in giving us the soil of the agriculturist—humus. Many of these processes are still in operation, and soil making in a very true sense goes on under our very feet.

Amber, which is merely fossilized resin, the sappy product of certain coniferous trees, is found in but few places. Among them are a portion of the Baltic sea coast, near Koenigsberg, and the island of Santo Domingo. The amber is usually found in flattened, egg shaped lumps, varying in size from a pea to a man's fist. These are dull on the exterior and are covered with a sort of brownish crust.

The quite common hit and miss method of testing seed corn, in which the corn is shelled first and tested afterward, will spell disaster for a good many the coming season. Under this system there is no way of eliminating the dead or weak germed kernels, which can only lessen the planter boxes and decrease the stand. If all of the seed corn is planted the coming spring that has been saved regardless of its germinating quality, plates with holes large enough to accommodate the end of a broomstick will have to be used in the planter boxes.

Scientists who are making a thorough investigation of pellagra, the disease which has lately made its appearance in this country and owes its origin to the eating of moldy corn and corn products, seem to think it has its counterpart in the blind staggers which afflict horses and similar ailments of some other domestic animals, diseases which they hope to prove are superinduced by eating moldy corn. Whether the connection between the diseases can be established or not, an interesting field for investigation has certainly been opened.

The other day we came across the case of a breeder of blooded hogs and cattle who, it is said, does himself a positive injustice financially because he does not have his animals in even fair condition at sale time. We heartily commend in any breeder the practice of not pampering or overfeeding animals that are to be offered for sale, but there is a happy and entirely commendable medium that lies between these two—namely, the giving of the blooded stock that care from day to day which will enable them to make a good showing at sale time and which will at the same time give their owner the return to which he is justly entitled.

At a sale of Polled Angus cattle of which we read an account the other day, where the animals disposed of were brought across the state line without proper inspection, about a dozen of the animals were seized by the veterinary authorities of the state in which the sale was held and subjected to the tubercular test. Of this number ten animals were found more or less affected with tuberculosis, some so seriously that no portions of their carcasses were fit for food. This case is cited for the purpose of indicating the risk that the purchaser of full blooded stock runs and the wisdom there is in his insisting on a health certificate from a reliable veterinary authority before he pays the long price usually asked for such animals.

The North Dakota experiment station has been making a study of clover growing and in a report recently issued states that clover can be grown over the greater part of that state provided the land is prepared for the purpose by soil inoculation with clover bacteria. The land should be prepared as it would be for garden purposes, and on this there should be scattered from a field where clover bacteria are known to be present soil at the rate of from 100 to 200 pounds per acre, either after sunset or on a cloudy day, as the direct rays of the sun quickly kill the bacteria. This inoculated soil should be harrowed in as soon as possible and the clover seed sown at the desired number of quarts per acre. The station offers to send the inoculated soil to residents of the state free, beyond the cost of freight and packing. Where one cannot get the soil from an established field the nitrogen culture, which comes in a small sealed tube and is diluted in a solution in which the clover seed is moistened just before sowing, may be had by sending to the department of agriculture at Washington, D. C.

A Rapid City firm that has a reputation for cutting the corners exceedingly close, devised a plan to assist the government out of half of their postage bill. The way they went about it was to write their letters upon newspapers which they mailed for one cent, while the postage on letters is two cents. The government, however, became aware of their scheme with the result that they were caught in the act and brought into court, where they paid a fine of $50. Thus it cost them this much to save a cent, or a net loss to them in the end of $19.99, which is, after all, a sort of boomerang economy.—Traverse City Eagle.

Attorney General Bird pronounces unconstitutional the proposed scheme of changing the system of apportioning the primary school fund to cut out those districts from the apportionment which have an amount on hand. Superintendent of Public Instruction L. L. Wright asked for the opinion, stating that 18 per cent of the districts have a surplus of funds on hand and the amount is constantly increasing.

In his reply the attorney general points out that the constitution requires a proportional distribution of the money among the various districts which the proposed enactment would conflict with.

heart," said he. "Bobby 'll be wafting for you."

"I suppose so," she assented. "But hasn't it been exciting? Whose vessels were they, do you know?"

Orde glanced at her strangely.

"They were ours," said he.

Chapter 31

ORDE mounted the office stairs next day with a very heavy step. The loss of the North Star and of the two schooners meant a great deal to him at that time.

"I can't understand why Floyd started," said Orde. "He ought to know better than to face sure prospects of a fall blow. I'll tan his soul for that, all right."

"I'm partly responsible," said Newmark.

"You!" cried Orde.

"Yes. You see that Smith & Mabley shipment was important enough to strain a point for—and it's only twenty-four hours or so—and it certainly didn't look as if it were going to blow. Poor Floyd feels bad enough."

Orde began to appreciate his circumstances. The loss on the cargo of "uppers" represented $20,000 in money. As for the North Star and her consorts, save for the insurance, they were simply eliminated. The loss of $60,000 or so on them, however, did not mean a diminution of the company's present cash resources to that amount and so did not immediately affect Orde's calculations as to the payment of the notes which were now soon to come due.

Orde disappeared for a week, his organizing abilities claimed for the distribution of the road crews. When he returned to the office Newmark showed him contracts for the construction of three new vessels.

"I get them for $55,000," said he, "with $30,000 of it on long time."

"Without consulting me!" cried Orde.

Newmark explained that he had really been taking advantage of a lucky opportunity.

"Otherwise," he finished, "we shouldn't have been able to get the job done for another year. If that big Cronin contract goes through—well, you know what that would mean in the shipyards—nobody would get even a look in. And McLeod is willing to give us a price to keep his men busy. So, you see, I had to close at once."

"It's a good chance, all right," admitted Orde, "but it never occurred to me we'd build any more vessels until we'd recovered a little."

"Recovered." Newmark repeated coldly. "I don't see what 'recovered' has to do with it. If the mill burned down we'd rebuild, wouldn't we? And as we're making $15,000 a year out of our freighting it seems to me too good a business to let slip into other hands."

"I suppose so," agreed Orde.

"Therefore I had to act without you," Newmark finished.

"Of course," agreed Orde drearily.

"Joe," replied Orde, "I—I don't think I'll stay downtown this morning. I"—

Newmark glanced up keenly.

"You don't look well," said he; "kind of pale around the gills; bilious."

Orde closed his desk and went out. Newmark turned back to his papers. From an inner pocket he produced a cigar. The corners of his mouth slowly curved in a grim smile.

Orde immediately set into motion the machinery of banking to borrow on the California timber. Taylor took charge of this, as the only man in Monrovia who had Orde's confidence. At the end of a necessary delay Orde received notice that the west had been heard from. He stepped across the hall to the lawyer's office.

"Well, Frank," said he, "glad we managed to push it through with so little trouble."

Taylor arose, shut carefully the door into his outer office, walked to the window, looked contemplatively out upon the hotel back yard and returned to his desk.

"But there is trouble," said he curtly.

"What's the matter?" asked Orde.

"The banks refuse the loan."

Orde stared at him in blank astonishment.

"What grounds can they possibly have for that?"

"It's about the title."

"But I thought you went over the title."

"I did," stated Taylor emphatically, "and I'll stake my reputation as a lawyer that everything is straight and clear from the land office itself. I've wired for an explanation, and we ought surely to know something definite by tomorrow."

For the first time in his business career a real anxiety gnawed Orde's vitals. He had been in many tight places, but somehow heretofore success or failure had seemed to him about immaterial, like points gained or conceded in the game. Now the game itself was at issue. Property, reputation and the family's future were at stake. Therefore he awaited further news with the greatest impatience.

The message came the following day.

"Land office under investigation," Orde read. "Fraudulent entries suspected."

Taylor glanced up at Orde with commiseration.

"They simply won't lend money on an uncertainty," said he.

"Frank," said Orde, rousing himself, "I've got to be here. I couldn't get away if my life depended on it. I want you to go to California and look after those interests for me. Make what arrangements you please, but go. It'll be like a sort of vacation to you. And I'll make it worth your while. Take Clara with you. Now, straighten it out as quick as you can. Borrow that money on it and send it on p. d. q."

Taylor hesitated. "All right," he said at last.

"Good!" cried Orde, rising and holding out his hand. He made his way to the office of the Welton Lumber company.

"Look here, Welton," he demanded abruptly when he had reached that operator's private office, "how much of a cut are you going to make this year?"

"About 20,000,000," replied Welton. "Why?"

"Just figuring on the drive," said Orde, nodding a farewell.

He then drove to the offices of all the men owning timber on the river. When

"I'm going to cut that whole 40,000,000."

he had collected his statistics he returned to his desk, where he filled the backs of several envelopes with his characteristically minute figures. He nodded his head vigorously.

"Joe," he called across to his partner, "I'm going to cut that whole 40,000,000 we have left."

"Do you think you can do it? It's two years' work."

"Sure thing," replied Orde. Then to himself he added, "I've got to."

GUN COTTON.

A Peculiar Characteristic of This Terrible Explosive.

Many and odd are the materials entering into the manufacture of modern explosives, but perhaps the most interesting of all these elements of destruction as well as the simplest is gun cotton. The gun cotton manufacturing industry is large, as enormous quantities are used in the charging of torpedoes and for similar purposes.

The base of gun cotton is pure raw cotton or even cotton waste, such as is used to clean machinery. This is steeped in a solution of one part of nitric and three parts of sulphuric acid. It is the former ingredient that renders the mass explosive, the sulphuric acid being used merely to absorb all moisture, thus permitting the nitric acid to combine more readily with the cellulose of the cotton.

After being soaked for several hours in the solution described the cotton is passed between rollers to expel all nonabsorbed acid, a process carried to completion by washing the cotton in clear water. This washing process is a long one, requiring machinery which reduces the cotton to a mass resembling paper pulp. Should any nonabsorbed acid be allowed to remain it would decompose the cotton.

If the explosive is to be used after the manner of powder it is still further pulverized and then thoroughly dried, but if intended for torpedoes it is pressed into cakes of various shapes and sizes—disk shaped, cylindrical, flat squares and cubes. When not compressed gun cotton is very light, as light as ordinary batting.

A peculiar characteristic of this terrible explosive is that a brick of it when wet may be placed on a bed of hot coals, and as the moisture dries out the cotton will flake and burn quietly. If dry originally, however, the gun cotton will explode with terrible force at about 320 degrees of heat.

In general it is the custom to explode gun cotton by detonation or an intense shock instead of by heat. In a torpedo the explosive charge is wet, this wet cotton being exploded by means of dry cotton in a tube, this having been fired by a cap of fulminate of mercury, the cap itself having been fired by the impact of the torpedo against the target.—Harper's Weekly.

How to Darn a Glove Finger.

If you want to mend a glove finger in a hurry and have no special darner handy, use a boy's marble to slip under the hole. These come in different sizes and make a small neat darn easy. Rips should be mended on the outside with a thread as much like that used in stitching as may be. Strive to imitate the seam sewing. Tears in the material may be overcast in tiny stitches on the wrong side, or if they are jagged the edge should be buttonholed and the space filled with other rows of the buttonholing. Always use a fine needle in glove mending, as a heavy one weakens the kid.

BUFFALO RANGE IN PENNSYLVANIA

Lehigh County to Have a Large Game Preserve.

ONE OF FINEST IN THE STATE.

Two Parks to Be Established in the Preserve, Which Will Comprise Nearly a Thousand Acres—Novel Fence Eight Feet High to Be Built.

Plans have been completed and work is far advanced on the only buffalo range east of the Rocky mountains which will be established this spring in Lehigh county, Pa., by Colonel Harry C. Trexler of the governor's staff, president of the Lehigh Portland Cement company. This game preserve will be the fulfillment of a dream long cherished by Colonel Trexler. Its inception came to him when about ten years ago he made several trips to Wyoming in search of big game. He then said that if he lived he would establish a game preserve that would be one of the finest in Pennsylvania. Preparatory to carrying out his object he bought a number of farms skirting the Jordan creek, about ten miles northwest of Allentown, Pa.

Experts have declared that nowhere in the United States are there better natural facilities for a big game park. It will comprise nearly 1,000 acres almost equally divided on either side of the stream. The Jordan is fringed with timber and bushes, the sides of the ravines are covered with hemlock and deciduous trees, and all over the tract there are clumps of woodland. There is everything that big game delights in when allowed to run at its free will in nature—trees, shrubbery, rocks, deep valleys, meadows and broad stretches of grass. Besides the Jordan, the game will find water at many springs and some fine rills that run through fields and down hillsides.

Both Shelter and Food.

To perfect his preparations Colonel Trexler engaged Charles W. Gossart, a civil engineer, to lay out the park and inclose it so that the animals cannot escape. On account of a public road, which cannot be abandoned, it was determined to establish two parks, east and west, the one inclosed by nine miles of fence and the other by seven. The game may reach the main stream in each park, and on each tract there are all the shelter and food necessary for the animals without artificial help from man.

The construction of the fence, which will be eight feet high, is a work of no mean dimensions. Wire will be used, the first strand flush on the ground to keep out foxes, and for three feet the wires will be only one-half inch apart, after that two inches apart for several more feet, while the top strands of barb wire will be only five inches distant from each other.

Famous Hunters Consulted.

To assemble his herd of buffaloes Colonel Trexler went to considerable trouble, but his arrangements are so far advanced that he is assured of an exceptionally fine lot of animals. His consultants included W. T. Hornaday, president of the American Bison society and director of the Bronx (New York) zoo; Mrs. Conrad of Kalispell, Mont., owner of the largest herd in the United States; Major Gordon Lilly ("Pawnee Bill") of Pawnee, Okla.; Andrew R. Hodges, warden of the national bison range at Ravalli, Mont., and a number of famous hunters and fanciers whom he has met on business trips in Montana, Idaho and Washington. The buffaloes will be kept in West park, together with a herd of antelope contracted for from the Rocky mountain regions. East park will be the home of a herd of elk and deer.

Colonel Trexler has found that elk will thrive in this section of Pennsylvania. As for the buffaloes, he has the opinion of Mr. Hornaday, whose experience with the bison at the Bronx zoo has been very satisfactory, that buffaloes will thrive on this game preserve to even a greater extent than at the Bronx zoo. There he has a reserve of less than thirty acres for about thirty animals, while this park will furnish natural sustenance for fully 200 animals. Besides big game, the entire tract will be stocked with rabbits and seven varieties of pheasants, and dams will be placed in the Jordan and its tributaries for trout, bass, perch and catfish.

Has a One Minute Birthday.

Because she was born on Feb. 29 Mrs. A. B. Endicott, wife of Circuit Court Judge Endicott of Atlantic City, N. J., has been forced to have one minute birthdays on three years in four. Mrs. Endicott celebrated her birthday on the night of Feb. 28 only during the time that the clock was striking midnight, between Feb. 28 and March 1. She claims this neutral time legally represents her proper birthday and that she has a decision from her husband to support her claim.

One Night a Year of Treating.

A no treating rule will prevail in the City club of East Orange, N. J., which is to start out on April 1 as the successor to the Orange club. The plan follows that of the Westmoreland club of Pittsburg. For one night each year the rule will be abrogated, and then the members can treat to their hearts' content.

There were thirty-one visitors present from Deer Lake grange.

After grange closed refreshments were served by the ladies.

UNDER THE OCEAN.

Things That Happen at the Bottom of the Sea.

Naturalists dispute as to the quantity of light at the bottom of the sea. Animals from below 700 fathoms either have no eyes or faint indications of them, or else their eyes are very large and protruding.

Another strange thing is that if the creatures in the lower depths have any color it is orange or red or reddish orange. Sea anemones, corals, shrimps and crabs have this brilliant color. Sometimes it is pure red or scarlet, and in many specimens it inclines toward purple. Not a green or blue fish is found.

The orange red is the fish's protection, for the bluish green light in the bottom of the ocean makes the orange or the red fish appear of a neutral tint and hides it from its enemies. Many animals are black, others neutral in color. Some fish are provided with boring tails, so that they can burrow in the sand.

The surface of the submarine mountain is covered with shells, like an ordinary seabeach, showing that it is the feasting place of vast shoals of carnivorous animals.

A codfish takes a whole oyster into its mouth, cracks the shell, digests the meat and ejects the shell. Crabs crack the shells and suck out the meat. This accounts for whole mounds of shells that are often found.

Not a fishbone is ever found that is not honeycombed by the boring shellfish and falls to pieces at the touch of the hand. This shows what destruction is constantly going on in these depths.

If a ship sinks at sea with all on board it will be eaten by fish, with the exception of the metal, and that will corrode and disappear. Not a bone of a human body will remain after a few days.—Philadelphia North American

ARKELL TRIED TO BUY THE SUN

But Failed to Get Control of New York Paper.

ROOSEVELT AS THE EDITOR.

Former Owner of Judge Said That If He Had Succeeded the Ex-President Might Have Proved a Thorn in the Side of Wall Street.

W. J. Arkell of Canajoharie, N. Y., former owner of Judge, the humorous weekly, admitted the other night that he had attempted to buy the New York Sun and his hope had been to have Theodore Roosevelt as editor. He said:

"I am disappointed that my negotiations with the Laffan estate did not succeed. I am not sure we should altogether have made a hit. Mr. Roosevelt, you see, would perhaps have scared the financial coterles of Republicanism in Wall street. But I think we should have had a big thing. There is no doubt people would have wanted to see what Colonel Roosevelt said about things."

Expensive Cable Message to Africa.

Rumor has it that the negotiations with Mr. Roosevelt were nearly complete and that Mr. Arkell's cable messages to Africa cost him over $900. Mr. Arkell laughed when asked if that were true.

"You can say," he replied, "that Colonel Roosevelt was asked, if you like. I won't say any more than that. Of course it is obvious the Sun would be an ideal pulpit for him from which to address the world."

Mr. Arkell was asked about a published report that an agreement had been come to with the executors to buy the interest of the late W. M. Laffan in the Sun for $2,000,000, that a discussion ensued as to what the policy of the paper would be under its new proprietors and that when it was learned that Colonel Roosevelt was to have control the sale was declared off.

"That is not true," declared Mr. Arkell. "The truth is that I got in touch with the Sun people to purchase and offered $2,000,000. They replied they had refused $3,500,000. There our negotiations ended.

"Later I may try again."

CLUB FOR THE HAPPY ALONE.

These Who Can't Be Properly Gay Are Expelled.

After Maurice Maeterlinck's poem play in London a new woman's club has been formed, which is called "The Blue Bird." The membership of the club is limited; in fact, the number of members is cabalistic of one meaning —happiness. The whole object of the new London society is the pursuit of happiness.

Any members who after a test period show that they are incapable of appreciating the art of being happy are expelled from the club. Men will only be admitted to the club precincts four times a year, when dinners will be given just to show them how happy and comfortable women can be without their assistance.

The clubhouse has been selected. It will be redecorated with various shades of blue, with the club emblem of the blue bird of happiness everywhere visible. Here, according to the organizer, "any member can come and do whatever makes her happiest. If it is a good cry she needs, she will be encouraged to sob her heart out. If she yearns to walk down the stairs on her hands and knees she has our permission to do it."

London is awaiting interesting developments from this latest club.

HOT DOG IN VERY TRUTH.

Man Masticating Succulent Sausagette Bit on License Tag.

G. E. Sewright of Los Angeles, Cal., ate a wienerwurst, commonly known as a "hot dog," in a Los Angeles restaurant the other day and at the same time solved the mystery of the disappearance of Miss Anna Bell's Scotch terrier.

In the wienerwurst that Sewright was masticating with great pleasure was the tag of Miss Bell's dog, No. 4413. Sewright was amazed when one of his molars crunched something metallic. He examined the little piece of metal and saw it was a dog license tag. Then the police were called in to quell the riot. Miss Bell said that she lost the dog a few weeks ago.

Sewright has forsworn wieners, and Miss Bell has canceled the reward she offered for her dog.

Telegrams by Telephone.

The following announcement was made the other day at New York by Belvidere Brooks, general manager of the Western Union:

"The president directs that, effective at once, our offices be authorized to open charge accounts with subscribers of any telephone company with which we have arrangements for the receipt and delivery of telegrams by telephone."

This means that any Bell telephone subscriber can call up the Western Union and dictate a message to be sent by telegraph. The charges will be rendered with the regular monthly telephone bill.

Literary Notes

Education Versus Tuberculosis

"The latest and the most helpful note sounded in the civilized world's campaign against the White Plague, is the education of American school-children to avoid tuberculosis," asserts the Woman's Home Companion for April.

"The campaign itself may be described as a dual movement. On the one hand, are arrayed notification, registration and segregation of those tainted with tuberculosis; and on the other, education and prevention for the untainted. The greatest of these is the education of the rising generation, who, through this means, may live to see tuberculosis stamped out of all 'civilized countries.'

"So, while municipal governments and private charities are weeding out cases which would spread the disease, supplying outdoor sanatoria for the curable and refuges for the incurable, half a dozen powerful agencies are pushing the sane and sensible campaign of education among school children, with a view to eliminating the disease entirely in the generations to come.

"The one preventive of tuberculosis is right living. The place to teach right living is in the schools.

"Twenty million children attend school in the United States. Twenty million children are well worth saving physically as well as mentally. And if twenty million children of this generation are taught how not to have tuberculosis, the disease will not exist for the next generation.

"The most active agencies at work in large cities for the salvation of the children are: the board of health, the Public School's Athletic League co-operating with the board of education, the playground association for the control and prevention of tuberculosis. When these four agencies work in harmony results are immediate, electric."

DANGER IN DELAY

Kidney Diseases are too Dangerous for Charlevoix People to Neglect.

The great danger of kidney troubles is that they get a firm hold before the sufferer recognizes them. Health is gradually undermined. Backache, headache, nervousness, lameness, soreness, lumbago, urinary troubles, dropsy, diabetes and Bright's disease follow in mercilessuccession. Don't neglect your kidneys. Cure the kidneys with the certain and safe remedy, Doan's Kidney Pills, which has cured people right here in this locality.

Mrs. Thomas Barber, Elm St., Mancelona, Mich., says: "I am pleased to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills, in view of all they have done for me. Kidney and bladder trouble caused me much suffering. The kidney secretions were unnatural and filled with sediment and I was subject to backaches and severe pains in my loins. In the morning when I arose, my back was so lame that I could hardly get around to attend to my housework. Some time ago I obtained a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they were more effective than any other kidney medicine I had ever taken. The backache and pains in my loins have been relieved and I now feel better in every way."

HAMPTON CARRIES EVERY WARD

Although the Socialists Put Up a Strong Fight.

TO ELECT FRED H. THOMAS MAYOR

Proposition to Abolish Board of Public Works Fails.

People of Charlevoix Are in Favor of Direc Nominations—Oluf Nordrum New Member City Council.

Election day passed off quietly in Charlevoix, the big vote cast by the Socialist party being the maio feature, the head of the ticket, Mr. Thomas, receiving a total of 191 votes.

The proposition to abolish the Board of Public Works was lost, failing to receive the necessary two-thirds vote, by ten. This result can be accounted for by the ballots which were used not containing any instructions to guide the voter, in a number of cases the vote being cast contrary to the desire of the voter.

The people of the city of Charlevoix in no uncertain terms, signified their desire for direct nominations, the proposition carrying by a big majority in every ward.

The great run made by Mr. Thomas can be accounted for by several reasons, chief among them being his personal popularity and the fact that all the efforts of the opposition were centered against Mr. Hampton.

To sum up the result of the election is pleasing to everyone. To the Socialists because they cast a vote beyond their expectations; To the Board of Public Works because they were retained in office against their will; To the Republicans over the election of their candidates, by a large majority, after a strong fight, and to the citizens generally over the splendid vote given for direct oominations and the election of men to take charge of our city government whom it is conceded by everybody will give us a business administration economically carried on.

What is known as the strongest attraction on the vaudeville stage will be at the Majestic next week commeocing Monday, with "Ita" the 16 year old California girl mentalist and her own company. Wherever Ita has appeared, Ita has created no end of talk and wonder, and she is today recognized by press, public and scientific students as the best exponent of mentalism or as it is better known mental telegraphy. Besides describing, at each performance, all objects presented to her, while entirely blindfolded, Ita will also answer on any question put to her by the public, on any sensible subjects such as change of occupation, business opportunities, lost or stolen articles etc., and on this last item she has been very successful having been the means of restoring to their owners, articles that had been given up lost forever.

This attraction coming here on a heavy percentage, the admission during the coming week will be 10 and 15c and on Thursday afternoon a special matinee will be given for ladies only, all male spectators and attaches of the house being barred, so that the lady patrons might ask Ita questions which in the presence of men, might not be put to her so if in doubt come and ask Ita.

Mancelona Council Investigates our Water Plant

Were Also Much Impressed With Paving of Best Little City Anywhere

Seven of our business men and village officers took a little trip last week Friday to some of the neighboring towns and cities to investigate the water plants that are in operation in those places. The places visited were Petoskey, Charlevoix, Bellaire and two of the party went to Traverse City returning Saturday the party consisted of A. S. Culbertsnn, G. H. Fitch, E. L. Lyon, Jno. Otis, F. M. Parmelee, Levi Baer and W. E. Neeland.

Those men realizing as do most of the other tax payers of Mancelona, that our village water plant is running at an enormous expense, way above what should be required to furnish water to a village of this size, took this trip at their own expense to investigate and if possible to find some plan whereby our regular expense could be cut down

Charlevoix appears to have the plan that appeared most feasible of any in this region. They have a tower and tank which has a capacity for 120,000 gallons and are using their pump only about four hours per day. This pump has a capacity of 1600 gallons per minute and is operated by a 65 horse power electric motor.

Two years ago the council received a proposition from the Antrim Light and Power Co. which would have reduced the operating expense of the plant about $500 to $1000 per year, but the village would have been compelled to build a tank which would have cost about $3,000. The president of the village and the councilmen who have investigated the matter thoroughly feel that a plan similar to that of Charlevoix would be desirable to Mancelona and it is quite likely that some proposition from the Power Co. will be received soon.

Some objection has been expressed by some toward a tank because of fear that the water from the tank would be inferior to our present supply, but the mayor of Charlevoix informed those visiting there that the temperature of water in the tank was only two degrees above that of water from the well.

The committee visiting also found some very desirable paving at Charlevoix. A composition which cost only about 90 cents per running foot.—Mancelonn News.

FOR CATARRH

Medicine Free in Every Case Where It Fails to Relieve

Neglect or pessimism, we believe, is the great enemy the public has to contend with when applied to the loss or recovery of health. Practically every case of consumption might have been cured if hope had been maintained and proper treatment had been resorted to at the first system of the disease. Until the advanced stage is reached consumption is curable. Catarrh is responsible, we believe, for many cases of consumption. It is about catarrh we want to talk to you today, incidentally consumption, since the two are so closely allied.

We have a medicine made from a prescription of one of the most successful catarrh specialists known. We believe it is positively without an equal. We are so satisfied that we are right, that we will supply the medicine free in every instance where it is used according to directions for a reasonable length of time, should it fail to give satisfaction, to every particular. We want everyone to try this medicine at our risk. There are no conditions attached to our offer. We put the user under no obligation to us whatever.

The medicine we want you to try is Rexall Mucu-Tone. It is a catarrh remedy that goes direct to the seat of trouble. It is carried by the blood to every part of the system. It purifies and enriches the blood, tones up the mucus cells, and brings about a condition of health and strength that tends to prevent the germs of consumption from getting a start. Besides this Rexall Mucu-Tone is a wonderful appetizer, digestive and and flesh builder. Its good effects are often felt from the very first dose. It is one of the largest and most satisfactory selling medicines that we have ever had anything to do with.

We know so much of the great good that it has done that we personally back it up with our reputation and money, which fact should be ample guarantee to satisfy anybody. Rexall Mucu-Tone comes in two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store. The Rexall Store. The Ivy Drug Store A. B. Fleischer, proprietor.

Literary Notes

The Paper Pattern

O daughter, lay your pattern down and pin it straight and strong,
And humbly strive to cut it right and never cut it wrong.
You will find the undertaking is no merry idle jest,
But you'll finish it by Doomsday
if you do your level best
And follow all directions and do as you are told,
The double perforations on a lengthwise fold.
You've taken "Art" at college, so these tissue shapes grotesque
Will probably suggest to you a motif Romanesque;
A mingling of geometry and lumpy l'art nouveau,
Chaotic parallelograms that
Euclid didn't know.
No matter if you turn to art or mathematics cold,
Lay double perforations on a lengthwise fold.
You've crossed the steps of Tartary and tiffimmed with the Shaw,
You've never lost your bearings from the pole to Panama!
Your smattering of Sanscrit, too, will help you to translate
The mystic jingling jargon that describes the fashion-plate.
So blaze your trail with caution,
then lay with courage bold.
The double peforations on a lengthwise fold.
And when your task is finished, if by chance you should succeed,
You will feel you've earned your laurels for a very glorious deed!
The baton of a marechal, the halo of a saint,
The brightest golden aureole that artist hand can paint,
Will seem to you inadequate, because your name's enrolled
In double perforations on a lengthwise fold!

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucus surfaces. Such articles should never be used on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucus surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

THE MODERN FARM HOME.

How Work Can Be Lightened For Women In the Country.

It has been said that the home of the farmers would be made more attractive and the burden of the farmers' wives lightened if the farmers had more money. The complaint is made that the land yields him and his but a scanty living and that his labor is long and hard and his rewards are few. This is only partly true. Much of the drudgery on the farm, both for the farmer's wife and for himself, is due not so much to a lack of money as to a lack of thought.

Many of the conveniences of the city homes now regarded as necessities could be put into country houses at slight cost. Women of the farms have gone along for generations enduring hardships and bearing the real burdens of country life without complaint. They have done their part nobly. They have cooked and washed and ironed, have done their housework, borne their children and reared them in the fear of God; have made the clothes for the growing family and for themselves and attended to the thousand duties of the household, day after day and year after year, with little opportunity for relaxation or rest. And in all this they have been patient, bearing their hardships, putting up with inconveniences, because they love their homes and their families. The most divinely patient creature on earth is the farmer's wife.

For years improvement has been going on in machinery and appliances that have lessened the farmer's labor and increased his productive capacity. These things have been mostly for the fields. But of recent years inventors have turned their attention to the things for the homes, and with them the burdens of the farmer's wife are being lightened.

It is not becoming in the farmer to cut his grass with a mower instead of a scythe and let his wife pump water when a windmill or gasoline engine would do it for her. There is no reason why any farmer who can afford a manure spreader should not have running water, hot and cold, in his house. Acetylene gas or electricity would be cheaper in the long run than kerosene oil and do away with the trouble of lamps. A washing machine costs only as much as any ordinary spike tooth harrow, and so on along the line.

The rural free delivery of mail, the extending telephone lines and trolley lines that are spreading over the land are all doing their part for the improvement of the farm home and the bettering of the condition of the farmer's wife. And the time will soon be here when drudgery will be at a minimum in the country, and the home of the farmer will be as comfortable as any in the land.

The Shop on the Farm.

The farm workshop should be detached from other outhouses. It should contain a forge, a chimney, a stove and a solid workbench, with a good steel vice heavy enough to hold firmly a two inch shaft.

One of the most important tools is the vise. A good heavy steel vise costs from $5 to $8, and it is worth every cent of what it costs. If you get a good one you can never break it or wear it out, but if you get a cheap one it is an aggravation from the very first time you use it. The same may be said of other tools. Whatever you get, get good. If you can only afford a half dozen bits, get twist drills, because they will bore either wood or iron, and they are accurate as to size. Get other tools as you can, but get them good every time, then use them carefully.

Remember that a buzzsaw is not intended to cut iron. A good jennings bit will bore a clean hole until you run it against a nail, but it will never bore decently afterward. If you must work old stuff with nails in it use twist drills.

A SUBSTANTIAL FARM WORKSHOP.

A shop should have a loft, not necessarily floored over, but there should be stringers across to support strips of wood, lengths of gas pipe, bars of iron, etc. It is handier not to have it floored, because these things can be reached by standing on a box. They are in plain open sight and not liable to be lost or covered up.

Have hooks and brackets on one side of the shop to hold whiffletrees, broken parts of machinery and anything else that you are liable to want to lay your hands on at short notice.

Weeds In Feeds.

In a recent bulletin of the Connecticut state experiment station is emphasized the danger of the introduction of weeds by the use of feeds made up in part or in whole of grain screenings and similar materials, which, as a rule, contain a great amount of weed seed. These screenings vary a good deal in quality. Thus an analysis recently made of wheat screenings showed about 30 per cent of flax and shrunken cereal, 15 per cent of foxtails, 8 per cent of bindweeds and pigweeds, 15 per cent of weed seeds of other species and 21 per cent of dust, fibers and sand.

Chapter 32

Orde was fighting for his very life. The notes given by Newmark & Orde would come due beginning the following summer. Before that time Orde must be able to meet them personally or his stock in the Boom company would be turned in to the firm. This would of course spell nearly a total loss of it as far as Orde was concerned.

The chief anxiety under which the riverman labored, however, was the imminent prospect of losing under the mortgage all the northern peninsula timber. Now, as the time approached, he realized that if he could not pay the notes the firm would certainly be unable to do so. What with the second mortgage the two years later and to be met by Newmark, with the outstanding obligations, with the new enterprise of the vessels ordered from Duncan McLeod, Newmark & Orde would be unable to raise anything like the necessary amount. He fell upon the woods work with unparalleled ferocity. A sale of the 40,000,000 feet remaining of the firm's up river holdings, together with the tolls to be collected for driving the river that spring, would bring Orde through by "the skin of his teeth." To cut 40,000,000 feet even in these latter days of improvements, would be a task to strain to the utmost every resource of energy and organization.

Nevertheless Orde accomplished the task. He lived constantly in the woods. The Rough Bird bull charge of the lumking, where his aggressive, brutal personality kept the rollways free from congestion. When the drive started the cut was banked for miles along the stream, 40,000,000 feet of it.

The strain over, Orde faced the task of driving the river.

From Taylor, Orde had several communications. The lawyer confessed

He lived constantly in the woods himself baffled as to the purpose of the land office investigation. The whole affair appeared to be tangled in technicalities and a snarl of red tape.

Orde did not much care for this delay. He saw his way clear to meeting his obligations without the necessity of hypothecating the California timber and was the better pleased for it. With the break up of spring he proceeded confidently with the largest drive in the history of the river, a matter of over 200,000,000 feet.

The morning of June 26 dawned clear. Orde drove rapidly to the distributing booms. After a glance at the river he entered the tiny office and set about the examination of the tally sheets. The foreman, Tom North, entered.

"The river's rising," he said.

"You're crazy," muttered Orde. "There have been no rains reported."

"It's rising," insisted North.

An hour later Orde walked out over the booms. The water certainly had risen. He called a boy.

"Here, Jimmy," said he, "mark one of these piles and keep track of how fast the water rises."

The river slowly rose.

"I don't like June floods," Orde told Tom North. "A fellow can understand an ordinary spring freshet and knows about how far it will go, but these summer floods are so confounded mysterious I can't figure out what's struck the old stream unless they're having almighty heavy rains up near headwaters."

By 3 o'clock in the afternoon Jimmy Powers reported a rise since morning of six inches.

"Tom," said Orde to the old riverman, "I'm going to send Marsh down for the pile drivers and some cable."

"What in blazes do you expect to do with that?" he inquired.

"We may need them." Orde stated, with conviction. "If those logs ever break through they'll go on out to Lake Michigan and wouldn't be worth the salvage."

"That's a mighty long chance," North commented.

"If this drive goes out it surely busts me," replied Orde, "and I'm not taking even long chances."

A cloudburst in the China creek district followed by continued heavy rains was responsible for the increased water. The evening papers mentioned this only incidentally. Their columns were filled with an account of the big log jam that had formed above the Iron railroad bridge. The glazing mill's booms had given way under pressure, and the contents had piled downstream against the buttresses.

Orde slept that night at the booms. The water by morning had crept so far up the piles that there began to be danger that it would overflow their tops. In that case, of course, the logs in the booms would also run out.

Orde set a crew of men to raising the height of the piling by tying logs firmly to the bolted timbers atop. This would take care of an extra two feet of water, a two feet beyond all previous records. Another crew stretched the fifteen inch manila cables across the field of logs in order to segregate them into several units of mass.

About two hours later the pile driver moved up. The swing was opened, and the men began to drive clumps of piles in such a position as to strengthen the swing when the latter should be shut. It was a slow job. Each pile had to be taken from the raft at the stern of the scow, erected in the "earrier," and pounded into place by the heavy hammer raised and let drop in the derrick at the bow.

Long before the task was finished the logs in the temporary booms had begun to slide atop one another, to cross and tangle, until at last the river bed inside the booms was filled with a jam of formidable dimensions. From beneath it the water boiled in eddies. Orde, looking at it, roused himself to sudden activity.

"Get a move on," he advised Captain Aspinwall of the driver. "If that jam breaks on us we want to be ready, and if it don't, break before you get this swing strengthened maybe we can hold her where she is. There's no earthly doubt that those boom piles will never stand up when they get the full pressure of the freshet."

The driver's crew labored desperately, hoisting the piles into the carriage, tripping the heavy hammer, hauling feverishly the clumps of piles together by means of cables.

Two of the clumps had been placed and bound when suddenly, with a roar, the upper booms gave way, projecting their logs upon the opening and the driver.

The half dozen members of the crew were scattered by the winds of a paule. Two or three flung themselves on their faces; one leaped into the river. Imminent destruction seemed upon them.

Tom North, at the winch that operated the arm of the swing, however, retained his presence of mind. At the first sag outward of the boom piles he set in operation the machinery that closed the gate. Clumsy and slow as was his mechanism, he nevertheless succeeded in getting the long arm started. The logs, rushing in back of it, hurried it shut. Immediately they jammed again and heaped up in a formidable tangle behind the barrier. Tom North, his little black pipe between his teeth, stood calm, the lever of his winch in his hand. A short three feet from the spot on which he stood the first saw log of the many that might have overwhelmed him thrust forward its ugly head. The wash of the water lifted the huge pile driver bodily and deposited it with a crash half on the bank and half in the water.

Instantly after the first break Orde had commenced running out over the booms from the shore.

"Good boy, Tom!" he shot at North.

Across the jam he hurried to where the pile driver lay. Captain Aspinwall examined the supports of the derrick on deck.

"That was lucky," said Orde briefly. "Stove you in?"

"I—I don't think so," replied the captain.

"That's good. I'll send over the tug to help get her afloat. We've got our work cut out for us now."

"You don't expect me to work my driver under the face of that jam!" cried the captain.

"What's the matter?" asked Orde.

"It isn't safe," replied the captain, "and I don't intend to risk my men or my driver."

Orde, with a snort of anger, seized the man and thrust him bodily over the side to the bank.

"Safe, you white livered skunk!" he roared. "Safe! Go over in the middle of that ten acre lot and lie down on your face and see if you feel safe there! Get out, the whole pack of you! I'm in charge here now."

Aspinwall picked himself up.

"Get off my driver!" he snarled.

"This driver is requisitioned!" cried Orde. "Get out! I've got to save my logs!"

Tom North and some others of the crew came running across the jam.

"Get a cable to the winch!" Orde shouted at these as soon as they were within hearing. "And get Marsh up here with the Sprite. We've got to get afloat."

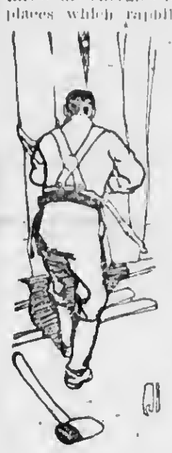
He paid no more attention to the ejected crew.

A few minutes' hard work put the driver afloat. Fortunately its raft of piles had not become detached in the upheavat.

"Tom," said Orde briskly to North, "you know the pile driving business. Pick out your crew and take charge."

Orde took charge of the situation in its entirety, as a general might. He set North immediately to driving clumps each of sixteen piles, bound to solidity by chains, and so arranged in angles and slants as to divert the enormous pressure toward either bank, thus splitting the enemy's power. The small driver owned by the Boom company drove similar clumps here, there and everywhere that need arose or weakness developed. Seventy-five men opposed to the weight of 20,000,000 tons of logs and a river of water the expedients invented by desperation and desperation.

Orde gave over formal defenses and threw his energies to saving the weak places which rapidly developed. By the most tremendous exertions he seemed but just able to keep even. Piles quivered, bent slowly outward. Immediately, before the logs behind them could stir, the pile driver must do its work. Back and forth darted the Sprite and her sister tug, the Spray, towing the pile drivers or the strings of piles. Under the drowning destruction the crews had to do their work. And if ever a break should come there would be no escape. Crushed and buried, the men would lie borne to an unknown grave in the lake. Every man knew it. Darkness came. No one stopped for food.



He seemed but just able to keep even

Morning found no change in the situation. The water rose steadily. The logs grew more and more restive; the defenses weaker and more inadequate.

Chapter 33

All that day and the next night the fight was hand to hand without the opportunity of a breathing space. Then Orde bareheaded and dishevelled, strung to a high excitement, began to be harassed by annoyances. The piles gave out. Newmark left, ostensibly to purchase more. He did not return. Tom North and Jim Denning, their eyes burning deep in their heads for lack of sleep, came to Orde, holding to him symbolically their empty hands.

"No more piles," they said briefly.

"Get 'em," said Orde with equal brevity. "Newmark will have enough here shortly. In the meantime get them."

North and his friend disappeared talking with them the crews of the drivers and the two tugs. After an interval they returned towing small rafts of the long timbers. Orde did not make any inquiries, nor until days later did he see a copy of the newspaper telling how a lawless gang of riverfmen had driven away the railroad men and stolen the railroad's property.

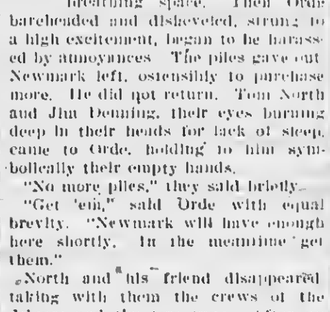
Orde was everywhere. Miles and miles he traveled, running along the tops of the booms, over the surface of the jam, spying the weakening places and hurrying to them a rescue.

Toward noon the piles gave out again.

"Where in h— is Newmark?" exploded Orde. He sent North and a crew of men to cut piles from standing timber in farm wood lots near the river.

"If the owners object stand them off with your peavies!"

Down river the various mill owners were busy with what men they had left in stringing defenses across the river in case Orde's works should go out. When Orde heard this he swore vigorously.



"Come on and let's get something done."

"Crazy fools!" he spat out. "They'd be a lot better off helping here. If this goes out their little booms won't amount to a whiff of wind."

He sent word to that effect; but, lacking the enforcement of his personal presence, his messages did not carry conviction, and the panic stricken owners continued to labor, each according to his ideas. However, Welton answered the summons. Orde hailed his coming with a shout.

"I want a dredge!" he yelled as soon as the lumberman was within distance. "I believe we can relieve the pressure somewhat by a channel into Stearn's bayou. Get that government dredge up and through the bayou as soon as you can."

"All right," said Welton briefly. "Can you hold her?"

"I've got to hold her," replied Orde between clinched teeth. "Where in h— is Newmark? I need him for fifty things, and he's disappeared off the face of the earth! Hardy, that second cable! She's snapped a strand! Get a re-enforcing line on her!" He ran without another thought of Welton.

But flesh and blood has its limit of endurance, and that limit was almost reached. Orde heard the first premonitions of reaction in the mild grumblings that arose. Although the need for struggle against the tireless dynamics of the river was as insistent as ever, although it seemed certain that a moment's cessation of effort would permit the enemy an irretrievable gain, he called a halt on the whole work.

"Boys," said he irrelevantly, "let's have a smoke."

He threw himself full length against a slanting pile, leisurely filling his pipe. The men stared a moment and then followed his example. The horizon lay low and black against the afterglow. Beneath it the river shone like silver. Over beyond the rise of land that lay between the river and Stearn's bayou could be seen the cloud of mingled smoke and steam that marked the activity of the dredge. Orde was apparently more at ease than any of the rest, but each instant he expected to hear the pronunciatory crack that would sound the end of everything. Finally he yawned and got to his feet.

"Now," said he, a new ring in his voice, "come on and let's get something done."

GOOD ROADS HELP TRADE.

Will Increase Population and Build Up Business of Local Tradesmen.

To no one more than the business man is the question of good roads a vital issue. The spreading of the doctrine of good roads will mean a large increase in the volume of business, will lead to great leaps in the development of this already rich country and will make money for every man in mercantile lines. While directly the binding of good roads will benefit the farmers and stock raisers perhaps more than any one else and will raise the value of every farm reached by good roads, still the business men come in a close second.

Good roads will increase the productivity of the land because it will give the farmers a better outlet for their marketable stuff and will lead to such an increase in population that there will be more workers per square mile than there are under the old roads system. Good roads will open for settlement and cultivation land now lying out of the radius of profitable farming. It will put more square miles of territory within trade distance of your town.

The business men of any town are interested in bringing to that town trade from greater distances than is easily covered on our present roads. It increases the volume of business, and every man in business in the community receives his share of the benefit. The farmer is able to haul his grain and produce to market at less cost and makes a greater profit per year from his labor. This additional profit is represented by the additional amount of cash he has to spend with the home dealers. When the farms are made to pay larger dividends more settlers will come to your neighborhood, and all of them will have to spend money with you and your fellow business men. So, directly and indirectly, the business men are benefited by the building of good roads.

Sense of Danger.

Dr. Waldo of London holds that people should develop a sixth sense to inform them of the approach of danger in the streets. Lafcadio Hearn once said: "While in a crowd I seldom look at faces. My intuition is almost infallible like that blind faculty by which in absolute darkness one becomes aware of the proximity of bulky objects without touching them. If I hesitate to obey it a collision is the inevitable consequence. What pilots me quickly and safely through a thick press is not conscious observation at all, but unreasoning intuitive perception."

A Sight Worth Paying For.

The cab, drawn by a weary looking horse, came to a standstill opposite a public house. As the driver was preparing to descend a small boy ran up with, "Old yer 'orse, guv'nor?"

"Old my 'orse? Look 'ere, my lad. Ah'll give yer a bob if it runs away."—Manchester Guardian.

His Contribution.

"Have you ever done anything for the good of the community?" asked the solid citizen.

Juvenile Good Roads League.

A town in New Jersey saw the economical necessity of road improvement as a means of recapturing scholars who had gone to the city schools. A Vermont farmer declares that improved roads mean larger districts and a better grade of teachers. But good roads are costly and most costly when lack of timely care allows them to go to pieces. A suggestion comes from Washington that junior road leagues be formed in country districts for the reason that country roads are "actually patrolled twice a day by schoolboys old enough to give the necessary attention to throwing out stones, opening ditches and sluices, draining off storm water, filling ruts and holes and giving notice to proper authorities of anything needing prompt attention on their part."—Harper's Bazar.

One Was Enough For Johnny.

The Sunday school lesson was from that Scripture which teaches that if your brother strikes you on the cheek you should turn the other also and endure even for seventy times seven. Johnny had listened to his teacher very attentively while she emphasized this fact, and after the lesson the superintendent rose to make a few remarks.

"Now, boys," he said, "how many times ought another boy to strike you before you hit him back?"

"Just about once!" promptly answered Johnny Bellneator.

BURNT CLAY'S VALUE

Durable Roads Built of It at Small Cost.

PREPARATION OF ROADBED.

Careful Grading and Firing Necessary. Highways That Are Constructed of "Gumbo" Clay Should Be Rolled Until Smooth and Hard.

In large areas in the south sedimentary clays are found very generally. In these areas the clays are of a particularly plastic and sticky variety known as "gumbo" and "buckshot." In such localities traffic is absolutely impossible during the wet season, as the wheels of heavy vehicles will sink to the hub.

Gumbo clay is black, owing to the high percentage of organic or vegetable matter it contains. It is particularly sticky in its nature, and is almost wholly free from sand and grit.

From Good Roads Magazine, New York.

WELL BUILT BURNT CLAY HIGHWAY.

After it has been burned, however, the plasticity is entirely destroyed, and a light clinker is formed which, though not particularly hard, when pulverized forms a smooth surface and seems to wear well. It should be understood that not all of the clay out of which the road is to be constructed is to be clinkered, but only a sufficient amount should be rendered nonplastic to neutralize the too sticky character of the native clay.

Good sound wood, as dry and well seasoned as it is possible to procure, should be provided before beginning the work and stacked at convenient intervals along the side of the road. About one cord of wood has been found necessary for eight linear feet of roadbed twelve feet wide.

After grading the road to an even width between ditches it is plowed up as deeply as practicable. It will be found necessary to use horses or mules, as the extremely heavy nature of the clay makes the work of deep plowing difficult. After the plowing has been completed furrows are dug across the road from ditch to ditch, extending through and beyond the width to be burned. If it is intended to burn twelve feet of roadway the transverse furrows should be sixteen feet long, so as to extend two feet on each side beyond the width of the final roadway. Across the ridges formed between these furrows, which should be about four feet apart, the first course of cord wood is laid longitudinally so as to form a series of flues in which the firing is started.

The best and soundest cord wood is selected for this course and should be laid so that the pieces will touch, thus forming a floor. Another layer of wood is thrown irregularly across this floor, in crib formation, with spaces left between in which the lumps of clay are piled.

After the lumps of clay have been heaped upon this floor a third course of wood is laid parallel to the first. This third course is laid in exactly the same manner as the first, and each opening and crack should be filled with brush, chips, bark, small sticks or any other combustible material. The top layer of clay is placed over all, and the finer portions of the material are heaped over the whole structure.

The deep covering of clay which is thrown over all should be taken from the side ditches and may be in lumps of all sizes, including the very finest material. It is spread as evenly as possible over the top in a layer of not less than six to twelve inches. Finally the whole is tamped and rounded off so that the heat will be held within the fires as long as possible.

When the roadbed has been carefully prepared according to the foregoing directions the firing should begin. If, however, a large force of laborers are available for the work a greater number of fires can be fired at one time.

When the material is sufficiently cooled the roadbed should be brought to a high crown before rolling, to allow for the compacting of the material. This can be best done with a plow or a grader. After this the rolling should be begun and continued until the roadbed is smooth and hard. The finished crown should have a slope of at least one-half inch to the foot.

Although it cannot be denied that the gumbo and buckshot clays of the south are particularly adapted for burning on account of the high percentage of organic matter which they contain, it is none the less probable that many of the surface clays and soils of the states farther north could be treated in the same way, and, in fact, any soil or clay which bricks or clinkers at a comparatively low temperature should be suitable for the work.

SOME OHIO SPRAYING RESULTS.

When the average orchard owner who has not been spraying his trees is broached on the question of spraying, quite naturally one of the first points he raises is, "Does it pay?" With a view to giving an emphatic affirmative answer to this question a number of the state experiment stations have during the past three or four years conducted most instructive cooperative spraying experiments, in which the matter seems to have been given very conclusive demonstration. Of the above type of experiments were those conducted by the Ohio station in 1907. Twelve acres of an orchard near Amherst were selected for the experiment, the trees being twenty feet in height and having about an equal spread of top. A few trees were left unsprayed for purposes of comparison. At harvest time 2,500 bushels of perfect apples were gathered, a conservative estimate of the gain due to spraying being $1,100, or over $100 per acre, and this after the cost of spraying, amounting to $125, had been subtracted. Set as this orchard was, in the midst of many other unsprayed orchards, the demonstration was very convincing, and as a result of the showing made many orchardists of the state were convinced of the practical value of spraying and took the work up the following year. The average of picked sound fruit at harvest time on all the trees sprayed was 90 per cent, while the same average for the unsprayed trees was less than 58 per cent. The main fact proved in connection with this work is that if one has an orchard which is worth anything at all he cannot afford to leave it unsprayed, as so doing will reduce both the quantity and quality of his fruit below the point where he can successfully compete with the growers of clean fruit. On the other hand, if the orchard is too far gone to justify the expense of spraying, it were better cut out and converted into stove wood, as it is merely an incumbrance on the ground.

HOW IT WAS GROWN.

When one reads of an exceptional yield of grain or corn an interest very naturally attaches to the methods followed in producing it. For this reason those who have read the previous reference in these notes to the authenticated yield of 154 bushels of corn secured from a single acre by John Sundberg will be interested in knowing how it was grown. The ground on which this fine yield was produced was second bottom Missouri valley soil which had been in clover pasture some five years preceding. It was plowed in the fall, and in the spring it was given the usual thorough preparation for corn, including disking and harrowing. An acre and a half were chosen in the richest part of the field, one acre being laid out for the actual test. The grower figured out in advance just how many plants he would have to harvest to produce 150 bushels at harvest. To this were added a sufficient number of kernels to make up for those that for one cause or another would fail to produce ears. He planted the corn early in May, using a drill and double planting, so that the rows were twenty-one inches apart, the kernels being dropped eighteen inches apart in the row. The cultivating was done with a single horse and a five tooth cultivator, this being given at frequent intervals so as to keep the soil loose and moist. At husking time an actual count showed 11,880 stalks with ears averaging in weight 11 ounces. The land was measured and the corn weighed in the presence of a justice of the peace. The variety planted was Reid's Yellow Dent. It is interesting to note in connection with this yield that it was just about six times the average yield per acre for corn the country over. It is worth remembering, too, that, in addition to using the finest pure bred seed obtainable, the corn was grown on a very rich piece of bottom land and was given ideal cultivation. When corn growers will give more heed to the three factors here mentioned in the growing of their corn the yield of this great cereal will be materially increased.

DOES CLIMATE CHANGE?

An inspection of meteorological records made in semiarid sections during the past fifty years seems to give little encouragement to the theory that the breaking up of the soil in those sections and the growing thereon of tilled crops tend to increase the annual amount of rainfall from year to year. The most that can be fairly said seems to be that tillage of the soil in sections of short rainfall makes for the a maximum utility of the moisture that does fall, while there is little question that mellow soil and growing crops serve to reduce somewhat the withering effect of hot south winds in that they tend to lessen rather than increase their capacity to absorb moisture.

There are a good many breeders who it seem to be slow in learning the lesson that they should keep for breeding purposes and not sell the best individuals which they produce. It is hard to refuse a long price for a fine animal, but here is a case where a fellow's farsighted self interest ought to serve him well.

The Missouri legislator who left political life and embarked in the skunk business as a more congenial and savory occupation quite likely played the role of reformer for a bunch of unfeeling and unresponsive constituents.

The feeder is certainly not living up to his opportunities in a progressive age who doggedly stuffs high priced feed into a scrub steer which will fetch $4 when he could just as well convert the same feed into grades of high grade beeves that would fetch from $8 to $9 per hundredweight.

A well known agricultural paper in a recent issue recommended, unquestionably as the result of an error of oversight on the part of the "devil" or managing editor, the sowing of from 100 to 200 pounds of clover seed per acre. In view of the fact that ten pounds would be a superabundance of seed, the error will be detected at sight.

There may be readers of these notes who would like information relative to the several irrigation projects which are being carried to completion under the supervision of the national government or about public lands anywhere which are still subject to homestead entry. Inquiries addressed to the office of public lands, Washington, D. C., stating what is wanted, will secure the information which is sought.

The fellow who has been duping folks in some of the eastern states through the sale of a dope which he claims will render poultry immune from the worst ailments that afflict them for the rest of their lives is first cousin to that other chap who operated in about the same territory a year or so ago with a spray mixture the application of which he said would protect trees from their several insect and fungous pests for a term of several years.

That the sheep business bids fair to be a paying one for some time to come is believed in figures which have recently been published showing that since 1873 there has been a decrease in the world's flocks of sheep of 23,000,000 head, or more than 3,000,000 head a year. The decrease seems to be in quite a measure due to movements of population which have discouraged the keeping of the large flocks of the past, a tendency which means that the keeping of a limited number on the small farm would be attended with increased profit.

At Rothamsted, England, is located a famous government experiment station where exhaustive experiments in soil fertility and crop production have been conducted during the past fifty years. On one field to which no manure and no plant food has been given the average yield of wheat per acre during this interval has been 12.9 bushels. Another field which has been heavily fertilized with barnyard manure has given an average of 35.5 bushels for the same period. A third field which has been reinforced with commercial fertilizers has produced 37.1 bushels of wheat per acre in the same period. These English experiments should have a suggestion or two for some American farmers who are getting perilously near the twelve bushel yield as a result of continuous cropping to wheat.

The application of lime to land does not add to its store of fertilizing elements, but merely serves to correct an acid condition of soil, thereby enabling plant life to utilize the elements already stored there. Some experiments lately conducted by the New Jersey station showed that on sandy soils ground unburned limestone gave better results than burned and slaked lime. In similar experiments conducted by the Florida experiment station the application of ground unburned limestone doubled the yield of beggarweed, a legume which is classed as the clover of the state. An interesting fact which was developed in connection with this test was that the liming of the soil resulted also in a large increase in the number and size of nitrogen nodules, upon which the value of the legumes as soil enrichers depends. This service rendered by lime is one that those who are desirous of getting a start in alfalfa and some other legumes should keep in mind.

Among the several elements of the soil that make the growth of plant life possible is humus, or vegetable matter in various stages of decomposition, consisting of the roots, stalks and leaves of the plants which have grown thereon in a wild state or the straw, litter and manures which have been mechanically distributed. Not only does such decaying vegetable matter contain important chemical fertilizing elements, but it gives the soil that friability and looseness so essential to an easy manipulation of it with plow and cultivator and so favorable to a ready circulation of the soil air and moisture, indispensable factors in a rapid growth of plant life. In view of these facts the tiller of the soil should keep constantly in mind both the wisdom and necessity of maintaining this supply of humus in the soil and increasing it when occasion requires. A proper understanding of the matter should put a stop to the burning of stubble and straw, should mean the turning down now and then of growths of green manures and the raking and scattering of the largest possible quantities of stable manure. It is under a system of grain farming that the supply of humus in the soil is most rapidly depleted, and on this account the system is a harmful one and should be discouraged in all sections where stock raising and dairying can take its place.

The raising of more bushels of grain and tons of hay to the acre from a given piece of land serves only to accelerate the matter of an exhaustion of soil fertility unless along with the harvesting of the larger yields there goes the adoption of such methods of culture as will enable the soil to maintain a supply of fertilizing elements sufficient to give the heavier draft placed upon it. This is a point not often referred to and yet one that may well be kept in view.

Ohio and Mississippi valley farms are slowly but surely being threatened with the same fate which has overtaken all too many eastern farms and southern plantations through a long continued and ruinous system of cropping which has had no thought for a maintenance or restoration of soil fertility. The only course that can prevent such a calamity from being fully realized in the sections mentioned is the adoption of rational methods in the handling of the farm, crop rotation, dairying and stock raising and in general ceasing to employ thirty dollar methods on land that is worth from $80 to $160 per acre.

In Connecticut and some other new England states the laws which have been in force for some years past having in view the protection of deer have resulted in such an increase in their numbers that the animals have become a positive source of injury to gardeners and orchardists. One case reported lately in an eastern agricultural journal tells of the destruction of 500 young apple trees by them, the trees being virtually stripped of all their smaller branches. An agitation is already afoot looking to a repeal or such modification of the law as will result in reducing the number of the deer and keeping them in their legitimate haunts, the unlilled meadows and timberlands.

A recourse at hand for those who occupy positions which they feel are economically oppressive as well as of uncertain tenure is the taking of the steps necessary to secure a small tract of fertile land. This cannot be done in a moment, but once it is taken as an object for achievement and worthy of one's best efforts a long step toward the desired goal is made. A home on the land and a living exacted from the few acres adjoining mean hard work, but they carry with them a guarantee of health, contentment and economic self respect. Were this movement of population from the cities to the soil to become at all general it would effect a cure of the worst ills, social, economic and moral, that folks suffer from today, while it would mean better wages and more considerate treatment for those who remained in industrial pursuits.

The decadence of many a small town of a thousand inhabitants or less may be the result of seemingly inevitable economic conditions, agricultural and industrial, but it is worth while citing the fact that this lapse seems coincident with the amassing of enormous fortunes by big mail order houses in the large cities which bear none of the burden of taxation imposed in the small towns notwithstanding the fact that they are sapping their very lifeblood. Some day farm dwellers will wake up to the fact that their lands have shrunk in value, or at least failed to advance to the point that they otherwise would, as a result of this trading away from home. There can be no other result. The only reason why land is worth more near a town of 5,000, 10,000 or 20,000 people is not because it is more fertile or productive, but simply owing to the fact that it lies adjacent to a good town. A grain elevator, stockyards and postoffice are necessary adjuncts to every town, but they do not in themselves serve as a flaming advertisement suited to attract men of energy or business enterprises of real value.

$200 An Acre for Carrots

A net profit of $221.56 from one acre of carrots is the story that comes from M. P. Gill, who lives near Petoskey, Western Michigan. The acre that produced the wealth is one of the 640 forming section 27, Bear Creek township, Emmett county. The only fertilizer used was 25 loads of barnyard manure and this was for the purpose of compensating the land for the fertility removed by six successive years of cropping.

The figures that tell the exact facts are as follows:

Receipts from the sale of 1,003 bushels, $250.75; value of carrots fed to stock, 240 bushels, $50; total receipts $300.75.

Expenses of growing the crop: Rent of ground $1, fitting ground for planting, weeding, cultivating, etc., $23.42; seed 1½ pounds 75c; pulling and topping $1.92; hauling 1,000 bushels to market, six miles, $27.50; hauling 200 bushels to cellar $2.50, total $79.19.

The difference, $221.56, between the receipts and the cost represents the clean profits.

Four firemen were badly burned at Traverse City, Friday morning, while lighting a blaze at the plant of the potato implement company. An explosion occurred when the water was turned on to a pile of fine coal ashes.

The company has been burning slack coal and the ashes were dumped into a pile on the river bank. A high wind scattered them and caused it to ignite a small frame building. The department was called at 9:15 this morning and the first work was to extinguish the ashes to prevent further spread, as the plant is located near other factories.

Henry Lafayette, assistant chief, and Leon J. Baker, a volunteer, had a nozzle and the minute the water struck the hot ashes there was a blinding explosion, Baker and Lafayette being blown about thirty feet.

So heavy was the explosion that Baker was literally blown from his boots, they being found about forty feet from where he had been standing. Lafayette's right cheek was cooked and Baker, who is a stenographer in a Traverse City state bank, was burned about the entire face.

Back of the two men were Frank Umlor, a regular, and Harry Wall a volunteer. Umlor was knocked down and burned, Wall being blown some distance and also being burned. The other volunteers received slight burns. After the explosion the burned men and others again gave their attention to the fire and although there were two other explosions, they remained until the blaze had been extinguished. The wind was in such a direction that gas from the explosion was blown into the faces of the crew. The property damage is nominal.

The state will collect every dollar of the indebtedness of Frank P. Glazier's defunct Chelsea bank, as there are bonds enough to cover the entire amount. The state is coming from the bank $102,907.24. The original deposit with the bank was approximately $85,000, and that the state holds a bond with the Title Guaranty & Surety Co. for $150,000 given by Glazier as state treasurer. In addition it will receive $17,540 from the bank "dividends."

State Treasurer Sleeper, who acts as custodian for the funds of the bank, has turned over $76,947.50 to Receiver Wedemeyer to be distributed among the creditors. Seventy per cent of the dividends will go to the savings depositors and the rest to other creditors.

The number of bushels of apples ruined annually through codling moth infestation—the moth responsible for the apple worm—is placed at between 20,000,000 and 25,000,000 bushels, or nearly one-third of the total crop marketed during the past two or three years. Here is a leak, a leak of the biggest kind, that orchardists ought in good conscience to put an end to.

If cement is used as a stable floor lay a generous supply of bedding should be used. This will serve to protect the floor and the horses' feet and will offset the harm that might come from the tendency of such a floor to gather dampness. The same principle will apply in the use of cement as a floor for the henhouse, particularly during the months when the hens are closely confined thereto.

To any one who is interested in the project of earning a livelihood by the intensive cultivation of a small area of land a little book lately come from the press of Macmillan & Co., New York city, will prove both entertaining and instructive. They responded to a man

By midnight the water had gone down slightly Half the crew snatched a little sleep For several hours more the issue hung in equilibrium. Then, with the opening of the channel into Stearn's lesson, the heaviest pressure was relieved For the moment the acute danger point was passed Orde spent the next two days in strengthening the defenses. The men were able to take their quota of meals and of sleep.

The jam had been successfully held at the iron railroad bridge above Redding, but only by the most strenuous efforts Braces of oak beams had been slanted where they would do the most good. Chains strengthened the weaker spots, and on top of all ton after ton of railroad iron held the whole immovably. Noian had all the help he required. Every device known was employed to strengthen the jam For only a few hours was the result in doubt. Then, as the Clarion jailo lantly expressed it, "It's a hundred dollars to an old hat she holds!"

Orde received all this with satisfaction, but with a slight skepticism.

"It's a floating jam, and it gets a push from underneath," he pointed out. "It's probably safe, but Another flood might send it out."

"The floods are going down," said North.

"Good Lord, I hope so!" said Orde.

Newmark sent word that a sudden fit of sickness had confined him to the house

Now Orde decided to break out a channel through the jam itself. This was a necessary preliminary to getting the logs in shape for distribution. A opening was made by the piles, and the rivermen, with pike poles and peaveys began cautiously to dig their way through the tangled timbers The government pile driver, which had itself been sent up from below, began placing big five extra booms at intervals downstream to capture the drift as fast as it was turned loose The operations appeared to be quite over when word came from Redding that the gatters were again rising Ten minutes later Leopold Lincoln Bunn, the local reporter, came tapping in on Randall's old white horse, like a second Paul Revere, crying that the iron bridge had gone and the logs were racing down river toward the booms

"It just went out!" he answered the eager exclamations of the men who crowded around him "That's all I know. It went out! And the other bridges! Sure! All but the Lake Shore! Don't know why that didn't go out. No; the logs didn't jam there—just shot right under!"

"That settles it," said Welton.

"You won't quit?" cried Orde.

"Certainly. You're crazy!" said Welton, with some asperity, "if they can't stop a little jam with iron, what are your wooden defenses going to amount to against the whole accumulation? When those logs hit the tail of this jam she'll go out before you can wink. It's sure death, and I'm not going to sacrifice my men."

Already the news was spreading among the workers on the jams. Orde saw the government driver below casting loose from her moorings. A moment later her tug towed her away to a side bayou of safety out of the expected rush to the lake.

"But we can hold her!" cried Orde in desperation.

"It's no use, boy," said old Carlin; "it's sure death."

"Sure death!" Orde laughed bitterly "All right; sure death, then Isn't there a man in this crowd that will tackle this sort of sure death with me?"

"I'm with you." "And me," said North and the Rough Red in a breath.

"Good!" cried Orde. "You, too, Johnny Sims and Purdy and Jimmy Powers? Bully boys!"

"I reckon you'll need the tug," said Marsh.

A dozen more of Orde's personal following volunteered.

"We've got to close that opening first thing," said he. "Marsh, tow the pile driver up there."

The opening was to be closed by piles driven in groups of sixteen bound together by chains. The clumps were connected one to the other by a system of boom logs and ropes to interpose a continuous barrier. The pile driver placed the clumps, while the tug attended to the connecting defenses.

"Now, boys," said Orde as his last word, "if she starts to go save yourselves the best way you can. Never mind the driver. Stay on top."

Slowly the tug and her consort nosed up through the boiling water.

"Work fast!" Orde called to the men on the pile driver. "If we can close the opening before those Redding logs hit us we may be able to turn them into our new channel."

He did not add that if the opening were not closed before the jam broke, as break it would in a very few moments, the probabilities were that both pile driver and tug would be destroyed. Every man knew that already.

Tom North ordered a pile placed in the carriage. The hammer descended The work went forward as rapidly as possible. Four times the jam shrugged and settled, but four times it paused on the brink of discharge Three of the clumps had been placed and bonad, and fifteen piles of the last clump had been driven

"One more pile!" breathed Orde

The hammer ran smoothly to the top and fell. A half dozen times more it rlsped. Then heavy chains were thrown around the winch, and the steam power began to draw the clumps together

"Done!" cried Tom North

North murmured, and the driver dropped back with the current. The tug churned forward to accomplish the last duty of binding the defenses together by means of chains and cables Two men leaped to the floating booms. Orde and the Rough Red set about the task. They worked from either end toward the middle When they met Orde ordered Red aboard the tug

"I'll be this one Jimmy," said he

Aboard the tug all was tense preparation. In the engine room Harvey, his hand on the throttle, stood ready to throw her wide open at the signal. Armed with sharp axes, two men prepared to cut the mooring lines on a sign from the Rough Red They watched his upraised hand When it should descend their axes must fall.

Orde folded a knot. Upstream the jam settled deliberately forward, cutting a clump of piles like straw

"She's coming!" cried the Rough Red.

"Give me every second you can," said Orde making the last turns.

The mass toppled slowly, fell into the swift current and leaped with a roar.

"Jump!" the Rough Red cried, and his arm descended

Orde leaped blindly for the rail, where he was seized and dragged aboard by the Rough Red. The axes fell; Marsh whirled over the wheel; Harvey threw open his throttle The tug sprang from his leash like a hound. And behind the barrier the logs, tossing and tumbling, the white spray flying before their onslaught, beat in vain against the barrier, like racing wild beasts whose prey has escaped.

HOW TO DODGE A HOLDUP.

First Be on the Alert, Says a Detective In Chicago.

What is the best thing to do in case you are held up?

"I would let almost anything I have that if the citizen who is held up should yell 'Police!' or 'Murder!' the holdup man would run away every time," is the opinion of Detective Captain Wood of Chicago.

"The chief trouble is that people are not on the alert. I always take the outside of the sidewalk when out after dark. Then if any one should happen to be lurking in a dark passage way I have a good chance to see him in time to be on my guard. If I saw two men come toward me late at night and they separate I would get on the outside of the walk. If they be quite the time of me I would not give it to them, as this is likely to be merely a ruse to snatch your watch

"My advice is, 'When out at night keep on the outside of the sidewalk, keep on the alert, and if attacked make an outcry.'

"What is the best thing to do in case you are held up? That depends upon the conditions that enter into the matter, the weapon carried by the holdup man, for instance," said Assistant Chief Schuettler. "Some might have a revolver and some a piece of lead pipe. If your assailant is determined looking and has a good sized revolver it is best to surrender.

"If the man held up is of more than ordinary strength and confidence he may sometimes knock his assailant's gun out of his hand and get the better of him. If the proper degree of care is taken a holdup may sometimes be avoided altogether. If a man follows you at night and stops when you stop or walks opposite to you on the other side of the street it is likely that he is a holdup man. The best thing to do in that case is to get among other people or board a car or run into a nearby house."

CARE OF KID GLOVES.

How to Mend Them and Keep Them From Stiffening.

If when kid gloves are worn the hands become very hot and cause the gloves to stiffen and shrink, French chalk will prove a good remedy. The gloves should be put off and the tips of the fingers dipped in French chalk and rubbed gently one against the other, then finally rubbed with a soft duster. A little French chalk should also be put in each finger.

It is a good plan when wearing rings under gloves to turn them with the stones toward the palm of the hand. This not only prevents marks, but is more comfortable than when the rings are worn the right way up.

Kid gloves should be removed by turning them over the hand and afterward turned right side out, blown into, the creases smoothed out and finally put away in a glove box.

Nothing looks more untidy than to see any one wearing a pair of gloves with the finger tips protruding or the seams burst. So if you spy even a tiny hole mend it without delay and with fine cotton the same color as the kid. Never use silk, as it cuts. Don't break off the cotton, but cut it, or you will draw the stitches too tightly together and make the seam uneven.

When the finger seam is split insert a finger into the glove and draw the edges together so that they just meet and no more. A ridge spoils the look of the gloves and feels uncomfortable

A MIRACLE OF THE SOIL.

Where Productive Farms Are Harvested Every Second Year.

The Palouse country in the far northwest is a panorama of rolling hills, checkered with sagebrush and great wheatfields. Close to those wastes of curious gridiron that are rich fields covered with thick stands of wheat. The soil seems to have performed a miracle in producing this lavish wealth, but those standing crops are an indisputable proof of the triumph of dry farming The fields are harvested only every second year and always plowed very deeply, the soil being thoroughly pulverized in the odd years

A thick blanket of dust covers the earth good fairy in disguise, for that dust blanket protects the ground and preserves the moisture of the winter snows. Although very little rain falls during the growing season, this stored up moisture is sufficient nourishment for the production of a magnificent crop. The soil appears to have a volcanic ash that needs only seed and moisture to bear abundantly.

In raising wheat here loss is occasioned from the action of windstorms, which blow off the dust blanket and expose the seed, so every effort is made to keep the blanket on. Instead of sowing two bushels of seed to the acre, as in the east, one bushel is here sufficient. The grain is cut by headers and combination harvesters and thrashers, which also sack it right in the field.

There may be some waste from over ripe grain, but this method saves the cost of stacking and shocking and in some cases reseeds the ground, resulting in a crop of young wheat very valuable for forage. This wheat grass has the same effect as clover in fertilizing, and the green fields add to the attractiveness of the landscape, standing side by side with fields of yellow wheat and black dust of summer fallowed tracts, with a touch of sagebrush now and then for contrast.

When the sturdy German farmers from California first experimented in this country they incurred a great deal of ridicule. Now those very methods are producing thirty to forty bushels an acre, while the maximum cost of cultivation an acre is $5. Such facts indicate why the western farmers are able to winter in California or other favorite American pleasure resorts, run automobiles or even tour Europe and winter on the Riviera.

Makes Feathers Fly.

T. G. Griggs of East Orange N. J., is the inventor of a down plucking device which poultry raisers who have inspected it believe will fill a want in the industry. Other machines have been invented to do the work which Griggs provides for in his machine, but none has heretofore been anything more than an interesting piece of machinery with little practical worth.

Griggs departs from the lines followed in other machines and introduces an entirely new method. The fowl to be plucked is placed on an endless traveling belt and carried through a series of fingers, which are so arranged that they go over the entire bird, plucking it clean of feathers. The danger of tearing the skin is avoided by the simple expedient of having the fingers clutch only a few feathers at a time. The size of the bird is no factor whatever. It will stay in the machine until plucked, whether large or small A pneumatic tube carries away the feathers as fast as they are removed. Griggs is a civil engineer, and never raised a chicken in his life, but he noticed a few years ago, while visiting a friend who runs a poultry farm, that the labor of removing feathers from the birds was one of the chief items of cost in preparing the product for market. It is said that the owner of one of his machines will be able to reduce his expenses by 20 per cent.

Fat In Milk.

It cannot be that the butter fat in milk is obtained from the fat stored in the tissues of the cow, otherwise the animal would soon become emaciated. Cows obtain the butter fat in milk from the food they eat and digest and not from the reserve or accumulation of fat in their bodies. Reason as well as observation teaches that cows extract butter fat from the food they consume and digest, and to produce a large percentage of cream the rations of the cow should be rich in the elements of nitrogen and carbohydrates, which are found in linseed meal, middlings, bran, cornmeal and ground oats. At the Cornell university cows that yielded 200 pounds of butter fat annually under ordinary feeding yielded 310 pounds when given liberal rations of feed rich in nitrogen and carbohydrates. Cream will not make butter unless it contains fat, and profitable fats will not be produced unless cows are fed on rations rich in the elements that produce cream.

American Farm Tools.

American plows and cultivators are turning up the soil in more than seventy countries and colonies of the world—in Japan in 1908 $22,000 worth, in Asiatic Turkey $14,000, in New Zealand $50,000, in British South Africa $222,000, in Portuguese Africa $31,000, in Cuba $85,000 worth, while Argentina took $780,000 worth, Canada $474,000, Russia in Europe $250,000 and Asiatic Russia $770,000 worth.

Trend Toward the Farm.

It begins to look as though the farmer has got to pay the prices that other people pay for labor. The panic made the situation a little easier, but it has not relieved it permanently. It will be easier for a few years, but manufacturing and other enterprises will again absorb the supply of labor and leave the farmer just as he was

GOOD COUNTRY ROADS

Things Essential For Building Rural Highways.

IOWAN'S VALUABLE LESSON.

With a Small Capital Donated by Fellow Townsmen He Improved Roads In Jefferson Township, Wayne County—Drainage a Big Factor.

An authority on the construction of highways has the following to say in regard to the construction of country roads. He says:

To have a good road in any country in the first place we must have drainage. You will all agree with me there, because a road must be kept dry or it will be soft. I have a system of road work which I have followed for the last five or six years. We must have a system by which to build our roads or we never can have good roads.

I know of no better way to give my system of road work than to tell how I worked half of a township for three years, then tell how I fixed and maintained certain pieces of road.

Five years ago I took one-half of the road work in Jefferson township, Wayne county, Ia., there being about thirty-six miles of road in very bad shape, ditched up and culverts in very bad shape and only about forty poll taxes and $380 to do this work with.

From Good Roads Magazine, New York.
GRADING THE HIGHWAY

I took two plows, right and left, went all over the roads, plowing furrows from twenty to twenty-two feet apart on the side of the road. Sometimes when the road was in trough shape I plowed as close as eighteen feet. And low places and near culverts where I had used scrapers I plowed three or four furrows on a side. By the time I got over the roads I knew just what had to be done and how to distribute my work. As soon as it was dry enough to scrape I went on the road with a small crew. I fixed the culverts and wherever I felt I had time filled in ditches and threw up low places and got it in shape for grader.

I mostly put on ten horses donated by the people. In the fall some wanted their roads graded again and donated the work. I got $150 donation work. Then I went on the roads again with the plows and plowed one furrow on each side of the road, then fixed culverts and put in the time throwing up low places and filling large ditches. I then went over the road with a grader, asking a little donation in some places where the roads needed a little more work. I got $50 donation and the roads in fine shape. Next year I went on the road and fixed culverts and places where water had made some large ditches and scraped in the sand that lodged in the low places and at the foot of the hills. When the ground got in good condition I took two King drags. I hitched to them so they ran at an angle of forty-five degrees, commenced at outside of road, and when I came to a hill where the banks needed cutting I hitched near the end, so it would cut the bank that was to move the ditch over from the road. We would go a few rounds, one drag cutting uphill and the other down.

Six years ago a steep hill east of my house was in a trough shape, and I plowed the sides and threw it in with the scraper until I had it highest in the middle and about twenty feet wide. It took about one-half day. Then I commenced dragging it, and quite a large ditch had got on one side. I widened it by running against the bank with the wagon wheel while driving to the field, using it for a lock and to wear out the bank.

A hill west of my place which I commenced to drag some time ago was lowest in the middle. I had ten acres of ground to plow, which took me about four days. I hitched on to my drag with three horses, put the plow on it and started to the field. I commenced the road about twenty feet wide. A part of the way there was sod. I would bring the drag home and take it back every time I went. By the time the field was plowed I had an impression on the road, so the water took to the side of the road where I had gone with the drag. Soon the ditches were a foot deep, and, of course, the middle was a foot the highest. I kept on dragging every time I went to the field and would set my drag into the bank wherever it would get mellow. The elements did at least 60 per cent of the work. You may sight across the banks and the middle of the road is no higher than the banks, so you see the water has done the work, and I smoothed up after it.

The two miles of road I keep up in fine shape around my farm, and it takes about one day in the year to keep it up.

SURFACE DRAINAGE OF ROADS

This Is an Important Feature When Constructing Highways.

Professor J. R. Davidson of the Iowa Agricultural college, who is an authority on the drainage of highways to those interested in the construction of good roads, says that all roads should be provided with surface drainage. The cross section should be of such a shape as to shed all rain at once to the side ditches. To do this the road must be oval or have a crown and must be smooth. The first of these is a matter of construction and the latter a matter of maintenance. The side drainage system should be called upon to carry as much water as possible. Water cannot be carried away by the tile drains until the water has sunk through the soil and softened it.

The crown of a road should be sufficient to shed the water readily. If the road is to be maintained and kept free from ruts and holes less crown will do than if the road is to be neglected. The Iowa highway commission recommended a slope one inch to a foot for a crown in the traveled way. This is sufficient for most conditions. The crown should not be too great. A steep crown causes the travel to be concentrated at the center, where ruts will be worn and washing result. Again, there is some difficulty in vehicles passing. On the side of the crown the wheels of the vehicles have a tendency to grind the road down. This action, together with the swerving or flow action of the lower part of the wheel, has a very marked effect.

The steeper the slope of the road the more important the crown, for there is a tendency for the water to run down the track rather than to the side. If water once begins to run down the center of the roadway it is but a short time until the road is gullied out."

EXPERT POTATO CULTURE.

Specialist Gives Hints For Growing Tubers on Irrigated Land.

One of the recent farmers' bulletins issued by the department of agriculture is written by E. H. Grubb of Carbondale, Colo., an expert grower, who says:

The improved planters of today open the furrow, drop the seed, cover it, firm the dirt over the seed and mark the next furrow. Such a planter is drawn by two horses. The writer plants the potatoes about two or two and one-half inches below the surface of the soil. Experiments with potatoes planted in rows all the way from thirty-six to forty-two inches apart indicate that the best distance depends upon the seasonal conditions and type of soil. It is a problem for each grower to solve for himself. The distance apart the potatoes should be planted in the row also depends so much upon the variety, the fertility of the soil, the availability of water, etc., that each farmer must determine this from his own experience. I plant them eight inches apart in rows thirty-six inches apart. This gives the largest tonnage of potatoes of desirable size.

The writer's experience has been that seed of large size (two to six ounces) produce strong, vigorous shoots, as they furnish an ample supply of plant food to sustain a strong and vigorous growth until the feeder roots can take up the food from the soil.

During the last two years the best results were obtained from planting medium sized whole seed. While the cost of the seed has been considerably greater, the stand has been approximately perfect. Experience has proved that from one or two eyes only are sprouts developed in uncut seed. The seed end furnishes a strong vine. The other eyes usually remain dormant.

One of the greatest advantages of using whole seed is the protection from disease which may be present in the soil and which may attack the more tender exposed parts of the cut seed.

As soon as possible after the potatoes are planted the cultivator should be started. This implement has four shovels, each four or five inches wide and about fifteen inches long, two on each side of the row, and is drawn by two heavy horses. These shovels should run as close as possible to the planted tubers without disturbing them. The first cultivation adds to the depth of the dirt over the seed and permits the use of a light smoothing harrow without disturbing the tubers. The cultivator also loosens the soil on each side of the row and better fits it for the potato roots which will soon invade it.

After this the potatoes should be harrowed once a week, if possible, first lengthwise of the rows and then across, until the vines are five to six inches high.

After this the cultivator is used, but is not run so deep as at the first cultivation. Frequent shallow cultivation keeps the surface of the soil loose, conserves the moisture and gives a chance for the root system to spread.

BIG MONEY IN MULES.

The Average Three-year-olds Bring $200 Each.

Raising mules for the market is an industry which for some reason is almost entirely neglected in the eastern and middle states, yet there is no safer, surer method of making money, especially for the small farmer.

The notion that one needs boundless acres or a ranch covering half a county to raise mules successfully has been thrashed out and exploded long ago.

A farmer with a hundred acres could raise a couple of mules every year. When three years old, if a fair size they will bring him $200 each. If extra large and well shaped they will bring almost us much more. There are always a demand and a ready market for any mule, and the bigger the mule the bigger the price.

Colts should be allowed to run with the mares until four months old. They should be placed in a pasture by themselves and never allowed to stop growing until they have attained their full growth. From the time they leave the mare until they are shipped to market never feed them hay or oats. Sowed corn, bean fodder, cornstalks and straw during the winter should be their diet.

Mules thrive best on coarse food—not fence rails and the windy end of a barn, but any other food than hay or oats. Rations for sixty mules engaged in heavy railroad construction should be six quarts of corn a day for each and one bundle of rye straw for two mules at night.

They should be groomed and curried every night, the same as any valuable working horse, and the drivers never allowed to whip. Any abuse or overloading should result in the quick discharge of the driver, for mules are of all working animals the most timid and shy. They will go any place and do anything if they know it is all right, and if they do not know it they will not do it.

GOATS ON THE FARM.

Easily Maintained and Their Milk an Ideal Human Food.

Goats can be kept on a small space, many owners keeping them contentedly in stalls the year round. They are easily maintained and are very cleanly. They give a moderate amount of milk. Two goats will supply an ordinary family with milk. Goats' milk is claimed to be an ideal human food and is especially beneficial for dyspeptics and infants. The milk does not taste "goaty," but the taste for it must be acquired. The milk, however, is not cream yielding and does not make good butter.

Goats should never be fed grain in any shape, though they may be allowed a quart of bran a day. They should be given bulky food, such as hay, maize fodder, rye-straw and, in the winter, turnips and pumpkins. Never turn a goat out to graze on dewy or wet grass. The cost of maintaining a goat is 4 cents to 6 cents a day when in milk. Goats breed once a year and have two and sometimes three young at a birth.

A Good Arsenical Cattle Dip.

Breeders who are in need of a formula to prepare the arsenical cattle dip will find the following one very serviceable: Sodium carbonate (saleda), twenty-four pounds; arsenic trioxide (white arsenic), eight pounds; pine tar, one gallon; sufficient water to make 500 gallons.

The arsenical dip is very effective in destroying the cattle fever tick and has been found less likely to injure cattle than crude petroleum or emulsions of it if the dipping be done in warm weather. However, some injury is likely to occur when it is used.

The dip may be made stronger by using ten pounds of arsenic instead of eight.

To prepare the dip a large galvanized tank or caldron is necessary to heat the chemicals. About forty gallons of water may be placed in the receptacle and brought to a boil. Add the sodium carbonate, stir till dissolved, then dissolve likewise the arsenic. Draw the fire and add the pine tar slowly, stirring the dip the while. Before using dilute to 500 gallons.

On account of the poisonous nature of arsenic, great care should be used in the preparation and handling of the dip.

Remedy For Pig Worms.

When the young pigs get worms there is not much use attempting to fatten them until they are relieved of the malady. A simple and effective remedy is turpentine fed in milk to pigs in a solution of one teaspoonful once every day to about every 100 pounds of live weight. The treatment may be continued for three days and may be more beneficial if the pigs are not given other feed for a period of twelve to twenty-four hours before the treatment is begun. The quarters should be kept clean and sanitary, and the pastures should be changed frequently.

Unlawful to Sign for More than One Candidate for Same Office

Complete Publicity Provided for.—Candidates are Beginning to get Busy now They have to go Before the People.

The people of Charlevoix county having declared in favor of direct nomination of candidates for county officers as well as the nomination of those officers whom it is mandatory, under the law, to nominate by the primary system, the required petitions for nomination of candidates are beginning to be circulated. To guide the voters in the signing of such petitions and the necessity of carefully considering before affixing names we print the law in regard to the signing of nominating petitions.

419. Signing of Petitions, Inspection of, Etc.—It shall be unlawful for any enrolled voter to sign more than one such nominating petition for the same office except where there are two or three candidates to be nominated for the same office, when he may sign as many petitions as there are persons to be elected to such office. The same rule shall apply to qualified electors in the signing of petitions of candidates of a new political party. It shall be unlawful for any candidate to wilfully and intentionally procure more names upon nomination petitions than the maximum number prescribed in this act. The various county clerks shall prepare and keep on hand blank forms of nomination petitions for the use of the voters and candidates in said county. Nothing herein contained shall be constructed to prohibit any candidate from having his own nomination petitions printed, but they must comply substantially with the above form. All such nomination petitions shall be open to public inspection and subject to examination after being filed in the office of secretary of state, or county clerk, in accordance with such reasonable rules and regulations as may be prescribed by such officers. The various offices named herein shall keep a public record of the nomination petitions filed in a book for that purpose, which record shall indicate the names of the candidates, the offices sought, and the date when such nomination petitions were filed.

419a. Date of Filing Petitions, Certifying Names of Candidates, Etc.—The secretary of state and the various county clerks shall receive nomination petitions filed in accordance with the provisions of this act up to four o'clock, standard time, in the afternoon of the fifteenth day before the September primary. The secretary of state, or county clerk, shall forthwith prepare and publicly expose in his office a list of the candidates for offices named in the nomination petitions filed in his office, as near as may be, as they will appear upon the official primary election ballots. If any nomination petitions contain more than the necessary percentage of names hereinbefore referred to, the excess over and above the necessary four per cent shall not be considered nor counted. The said secretary of state, or county clerk, shall forthwith, after the last day named herein for receiving and filing nomination petitions, certify to the proper board or boards of election commissioners and to the county clerk of each county, the names and post office addresses of all party candidates whose petitions meet the requirements of this act, together with the name of the political party and the office for which they are candidates. In case it is determined, that the nomination petitions of any candidates do not comply with the requirements of this act, or if for any other cause such candidate is not entitled to have his name printed upon the official primary election ballots, it shall be the duty of the secretary of state or county clerk, to immediately notify such candidate of such fact, together with a statement of the reason why his name was not certified to the respective board of election commissioners. The county clerk of each county shall forthwith upon receipt of said certified list publish under the proper party designations the title of each office, the names and addresses of all persons so certified and for whom nomination papers have been filed in his office, giving the name and address of each, the date of the primary, the hours during which the polls will be open, and that the primary will be held at the regular polling places in each precinct. It shall be the duty of the county clerk to publish such once in each week for two consecutive weeks next preceeding said primary. Such clerk shall also forthwith mail copies of such notice to each township, village and city clerk of his county, who shall immediately post copies of the same in at least ten public places in each precinct in his township, village or city, designating therein the location of the poll and booth in each election precinct. Points Regarding the Census

The census begins April 15 and must be completed in thirty days.

The enumerators will wear a badge inscribed "United States Census, 1910."

The law requires every adult person to furnish the prescribed information, but also provides that it shall be treated confidentially, so that no injury can come to any person from answering the questions.

The Census Bureau, prior to April 15, will distribute to every farm owner and tenant in this state a blank or schedule containing the Census questions relative to farm operations and equipment. This should be filled up, if possible not later than the morning of April 15, but if any one has been unable to fill it up by that time, he should do it as soon afterwards as he can.

People who do not speak English or who do not understand the schedule completly should get help from others, if possible, in filling it up.

The president has issued a proclamation, calling on all citizens to cooperate with the census and assuring them that it has nothing to do with taxation, army or jury service, compulsory school attendance, regulation of immigration, or enforcement of any law, and that no one can be injured by answering the inquiries.

It is of the utmost importance that the farm census of this state be complete and correct.

Therefore every farm owner and tenant should promptly, fully and accurately fill up the "Advance Farm Schedule" and carefully preserve it for the enumerator when he calls.

The only beneficial spray mixture is the Rex Lime-sulphur. We have it all ready to dilute and apply.

TAFT IS COMING

To Charlevoix County on Saturday, April Sixteenth.

To Attend Special Meeting of the Fruit Grower's Association.

Partly on account of the fact that there was a misunderstanding as to the date of the Fruit Growers' meeting and partly, I imagine, because the weather was ideal for farm work, only half a dozen farmers were present at the meeting held in Boyne City on Tuesday, April 5 and same was postponed to a later date.

Prof. Tatt will be at East Jordan at a special meeting April 16. Members have been notified and all are urged to attend, whether members of the association or not.

I have received a copy of the report of the State Horticultural Society for each member of the association.

I have left some of them in the law office of Knowles & Converse for members near Boyne City and will leave a supply in the county clerk's office in Charlevoix and keep part of them at my home in East Jordan.

Members are requested to call for same.

Respectfully,
J. H. Milford, Secretary

SELECTION OF SHEEP.

Some Points on Choosing the Best Breeds For Crosses.

An authority on the breeding of sheep for wool and mutton expresses his opinion on the subject in the following manner: To develop a good flock of breeding sheep for wool and mutton begin with the ewes that are half Cotswold and half Merino and be sure that you select a buck that is a full blooded Shropshire. In this cross you get a grade of sheep that is hard to surpass both for wool and mutton. In an experiment this method proved a good one. A twin lamb sheared when

FINE PAIR OF MERINOS.
[From Breeder's Gazette, Chicago.]

a little more than a year old sixteen pounds of good wool, and when a year and a half old the carcass weighed 160 pounds.

If the sheep are getting too wrinkly and the wool too short I get either a Cotswold, Oxford or Shropshire buck, and if the fleece is getting too hairy and light in weight I breed back to the Merinos.

Sheep like rape, but they should not be kept on rape alone.

During this the cold period of the year, when the pastures do not furnish enough feed to keep them thrifty and growing nicely, it is a good idea to begin feeding corn and fodder, cowpeas and clover hay and sometimes thrashed oats or sheep oats.

Ten sheep will eat as much as one cow, and every farmer should aim to feed accordingly.

Some breeders prefer to have lambs come in February. Although it may require care to save them during cold weather, they will go through the winter better and make better sheep than do late lambs.

Freshening Cows.

On a successful dairy farm, where a large number of cows are kept and milked, special attention is given to the freshening and drying cows. Three weeks before a cow freshens, if this occurs during the winter feeding period, the owner begins feeding about two pounds of wheat bran a day. No shorts are fed until after calving. This feed is gradually increased until at calving time the cow is receiving about four pounds of bran daily.

After freshening the cow's grain ration is gradually increased by adding shorts until the amount fed reaches a maximum of eight pounds for the best cows in the herd. In the case of the smallest milkers shorts are gradually substituted for half the bran after the cow freshens, so that these cows get only four pounds of bran and shorts as a maximum grain feed. The average cow in the herd gets about six pounds of bran and shorts when in full flow of milk in the winter.

An effort is made to have each cow dry from six to eight weeks each year. The cows are milked regularly twice a day up to a week of the time they are to be turned dry. They are then milked once a day for three or four days, a small quantity of milk being left in the udder each time. After this they are turned out to pasture and are not milked again until the next period of lactation begins.—Journal of Agriculture.

A Good Cure For Foot Rot.

Stockmen having trouble with foot rot in their sheep and unable to obtain a means of ridding them of the disease will find that the following solution is beneficial: Mix thirty grains of corrosive sublimate in one pint of turpentine and apply with a swab after thoroughly paring the hoofs. The advantages of this mixture are: First, cheapness (the turpentine is the principal expense); second, convenience and safety in use (while corrosive sublimate is extremely poisonous if taken internally, it is not caustic in the above mixture, and if it gets on the sound flesh of the sheep, even on the tender skin of the udder, it does no harm, or if the operator gets it on his hands it makes no trouble); third, the penetrating properties of the turpentine carry the germicide deeply into the diseased tissues and insure a prompt and radical cure.

Helpful Dairy Hints.

The great drawback about dairying with grades is the loss of the male calves. You should not sell them for sires, and they seem too valuable for veal.

The flesh that the good dairy cow puts on her back when dry is the deposit upon which she can draw when she freshens.

A frequent change of feed will keep the cow's appetite keen, and her production will depend upon what she eats.

Dried beet pulp is coming to be a great dairy feed. It's only a short time since it was considered a waste product.

Milk is one commodity in which the buyer refuses to recognize the different grades of excellence.

Good Road Mottoes.

Good roads promote rural optimism.

Mudholes are the forerunners of good roads.

Many a "good enough" road is not a good road at all.

It takes more than talk to make a good road, though talk is necessary to start it.

Drag, Brother, Drag!

[The road drag has proved so valuable in improving poor highways that even the poets have turned their attention to it. Here is what a Missouri bard advises farmers burdened with bad roads to do.]

Then "if at first you don't succeed,"
Drag, brother; drag.
And once or twice don't fill the need,
Drag, brother; drag.
When a shower of rain has passed,
And the sun shines out at last,
While the roads are drying fast,
Drag, brother; drag.

And Gabe will come along and see—
Drag, brother; drag—
Just how a good road ought to be
Drag, brother; drag.
When he gets home he'll take his pen
And write you up the best of men,
And you'll be mighty famous then, too.

Chapter 34

ORDE now took steps to deflect into the channel recently dredged to Stearn's bayou the mass of the logs racing downstream from Redding. He estimated that he had still two hours or so in which to do the work.

This at first he succeeded in doing, and very successfully in affecting the pressure on the jam below. To the crew working in the channel dredged through to Stearn's bayou the affair was that of driving a rather narrow and swift stream, only exaggerated. A large proportion of the timbers found their way into the bayou. Those that continued on down the river could hardly have much effect on the jam. As yet only the advance of the big jam had arrived at the dredged channel.

"We can't keep this up when the main body hits us!" Orde panted to Jim Deming. "We'll have to do more pile driver work."

He made a rapid excursion to the Boom camp, whence he returned with thirty or forty men.

"Here, boys," said he, "you can keep these logs moving in this channel for a couple of hours."

Orde now returned to the jam, where, on the pile driver, the tugs and the booms he set methodically to strengthening the defenses.

But shortly the water began to rise again, this time fairly by leaps. For the hundredth time the frail woolen defenses opposed to millions of pounds were tested to the very extreme of their endurance. The network of chains and cables tightened, drawing ever nearer the snapping point. Suddenly, almost without warning, the situation had become desperate.

He shook his fist against the menacing logs

And for the first time Orde completely lost his poise and became fluently profane. He shook his fist against the menacing logs; he apostrophized the river, the high water, the jam, the deserters. Newmark and his illness, ending in a general anathema against jam and all streams, logs and floods.

"Well," said Tom North, "he's good and mad this time."

At the dredged channel Orde saw the rivermen standing idle, and, half blind with anger, he burst upon them. Then he stopped short and stared.

Square across the dredged channel and completely blocking it lay a single span of an iron bridge. Behind it the logs had, of course, piled up in a jam, which dammed back the water.

"Where in h— did that drop from?" cried Orde.

"Come down on top the jam," explained a riverman.

Orde, suddenly fallen into a cold rage, stared at the obstruction, both fists clinched at his side.

"That about settles it," said Welton.

"Settle!" cried Orde. "I should think not!"

Welton smiled quietly.

"Don't you know when you're licked?"

"Licked, h—!" said Orde. "We've just begun to fight."

"What can you do?"

"I'll blow her up with powder."

"Ever try to to blow up ice?"

"There must be some way."

"Oh, there is," replied Welton, "of course—take her apart bolt by bolt and nut by nut."

"Send for the wrenches, then!" snapped Orde.

"But it would take days. It would be too late. It would do no good."

"Perhaps not," interrupted Orde, "but it will be doing something, anyway. Look here, Welton, are you game? If you'll get that bridge out in two days I'll hold the jam."

"You can't hold that jam two hours.'

"That's my business. Will you send for lanterns and wrenches and keep this crew working?"

"I will," said Welton.

During the next two days the old scenes were all reived, with back of them the weight of the struggle that had gone before. Plans belonging to divers sad protesting owners were felled and sharpened. Even the inviolate government supply was commandeered.

Then all at once, as though a faucet had been turned off, the floods slackened.

"They've opened the channel," said Orde dully. His voice sounded to himself very far away. He felt himself moving in strange and distorted surroundings. He heard himself repeating to each of a number of wavering, gigantic figures the talismanic words that had accomplished the dissolution of the earth for himself. "They've opened the channel." At last he felt hard planks beneath his feet, and, shaking his head with an effort, he made out the philibeuse of the Sprite and a hollow eyed man leaning against it. "They've opened the channel, Marsh," he repeated. "I guess that'll be all." Then quite slowly he sank to the deck, sound asleep.

* * * * * * *

When Newmark left, in the early stages of the jam, he gave scant thought to the errand on which he had ostensibly departed. Whether or not Orde got a supply of pills was to him a matter of indifference. His hope, or, rather, preference was that the jam should go out, but he saw clearly that Orde, blinded by the swift action of the struggle, was as yet unable to perceive. Even should the riverman succeed in stopping the jam the extraordinary expenses incidental to the defense and to the subsequent salvaging, untangling and sorting would more than eat up the profits of the drive. Orde would then be forced to ask for an extension of time on his notes.

On arriving in Monrovia he drove to his own house. To Mallock he issued orders.

"Go to the office and tell them I am ill," said he, "and then hunt up Mr. Heinzman. I want to see him immediately."

The German entered rather red and breathless, surprised to find Newmark at home.

"Heinzman," said he, "in three weeks at the latest Orde will come to you asking for a renewal of the notes you hold against our firm. You must refuse to make such a renewal."

"Oh, I ain't backing oudt."

"All righdt," agreed Heinzman.

"He'll probably offer you a higher interest. You must refuse that. Then when the notes are overdue you must begin suit in foreclosure."

"All righdt," repeated Heinzman, a little listlessly. "Do you think he will hold that jam? I got lots of logs in that jam. If it goes out I will lose a heap of money."

"Well, you'll make quite a heap on this deal," said Newmark carelessly.

"Suppose he holds it," said Heinzman, pausing. "I hate like the mischief to joomp on him."

Newmark looked at the German sharply. "I suppose you know just how deep you're in this?"

"Oh, I ain't backing oudt," negatived Heinzman—"not a bit."

Little by little the water went down. The pressure, already considerably relieved by the channel into Stearn's bayou, slackened every hour. Orde, still half dazed with his long delayed sleep, drove back along the marsh road to town. Orde began to review the situation. As Newmark had accurately foreseen, he came almost immediately to a realization that the firm would not be able to meet the notes given to Heinzman. Orde had depended on the profits from the season's drive to enable him to make up the necessary amount. Those profits would be greatly diminished if not wiped out entirely by the expenses, both regular and irregular, incurred in holding the jam.

"I'll have to get an extension of time," said Orde to himself. "Of course Joe will let me have more time on my own personal note to the firm. And Heinzman surely ought to. I saved a lot of his logs in that jam. And if he doesn't want to I guess an offer of a little higher interest will fetch him."

Finally he pulled up opposite the Orde house, sprang up the walk and into the front door.

"Hello, sweetheart!" he called cheerily.

The echoes alone answered him. He cried again and yet again, with a growing feeling of disappointment that Carroll should happen to be from home. A moment later Mary, the Irish servant girl, came through the dining room, caught sight of Orde, threw her apron over her head and burst into extravagant demonstrations of grief.

"What is it, Mary?" he asked very quietly.

But the girl only wept the louder. Orde sprang forward to shower her with questions. These elicited nothing but broken and incoherent fragments concerning "the missus," "oh, the sad day!" At this moment Bobby appeared from the direction of the kitchen. Orde, frantic with alarm, fell upon his son. Bobby could only mumble something about "smallpox" and "took mamma away with doctor."

"Where, where?" cried Orde.

At this moment a calm, dry voice broke through the turmoil. Orde looked up to see Dr. McMullen standing in the doorway.

"It's all right," said the doctor. "Your wife was exposed to smallpox and is at my house to avoid the danger of spreading contagion. She is not ill."

"Where was she exposed?"

"Down at Heinzman's. You know—or perhaps you don't—that old Heinzman is the worst sort of anti-vaccination crank. Well, he's reaped the reward."

"No; his daughter Mina. Lord knows where she got it. Mrs. Orde happened to be with her when she was taken with the symptoms that begin the disease. As a neighborly deed she remained with the girl. Of course no one could tell it was smallpox at that time. Next day it broke out, the characteristic rash appeared on the thighs and armpits. I telegraphed to Redding for [illegible]. Until she came Mrs. Orde stuck by like a brick. Don't know what I should have done without her."

"When was this?" asked Orde.

"Seven days ago."

"How is Mina getting on?"

"She'll get well. I suppose I'll have old Heinzman on my hands, though. Emotional old fool. Rushed right in when he heard his daughter was sick. Couldn't keep him out. And he's been with her or near her ever since."

"I'm going to step up to your house and see Mrs. Orde."

"You can telephone her," said the doctor.

He called up Dr. McMullen's house on the telephone.

"You're a dear, brave girl, and I'm proud of you," said Orde.

"Nonsense! There was no danger at all. I'd been vaccinated recently. And somebody had to take care of poor Mina until we could get help. How's Bobby?"

After lunch Orde went downtown to his office. Newmark came in. "Hello, Joe!" said Orde, with a slight constraint. "Too bad you got sick just at that time. We needed you."

"You know I'd have been there if possible."

"Well, we had a lively time, you bet, all right, and got through about by the skin of our teeth." He arose and walked over to Newmark's desk, on the edge of which he perched. "It's cost us considerable. I'll have to get an extension on those notes."

"What's that?" asked Newmark quickly.

"What's that?" asked Newmark quickly.

"I don't believe I'll be able to meet those notes. So many things have happened"—

"But," broke in Newmark, "the firm certainly cannot do so. I've been relying on your assurance that you would take them up personally. Our resources are all tied up."

"Can't we raise anything more on the Hotchkiss peninsula timber?" asked Orde.

"You ought to know we can't!" cried Newmark, with an appearance of growing excitement. "The last seventy-five thousand we borrowed for me finishes that."

"Can't you take up part of your note?"

"My note comes due in 1885," rejoined Newmark, with cold disgust. "I expect to take it up then. But I can't until then. I hadn't expected anything like this."

"Well, don't get hot," said Orde vaguely. "I only thought that northern peninsula stuff might be worth saving any way we could figure it."

"Worth saving!" snorted Newmark.

"Well, keep your hair on," said Orde, on whom Newmark's manner was beginning to have its effect, as Newmark intended it should. "You have my Boom company stock as security."

"Pretty security for the loss of a tract like the upper peninsula timber! I thought you'd surely be able to pay it," retorted Newmark, now secure in the position of putting Orde entirely in the wrong.

"Well, I expected to pay it, and I'll pay it yet," rejoined Orde. "I think Heinzman will renew the notes."

He seized his hat and departed. Once in the street, however, his irritation passed. As was the habit of the man, he began more clearly to see Newmark's side and so more emphatically to blame himself. After all, when he got right down to the essentials he could not but acknowledge that Newmark's anger was justified.

"Mr. Heinzman?" he asked briefly of the first clerk.

"He is at home ill."

"Already?" said Orde. He drummed on the rail thoughtfully. The notes came due in ten days.

"Well, who's in charge?"

"Mr. Lambert."

Orde passed through the grill into the inner room.

"Hello, Lambert," he addressed the individual seated at Heinzman's desk. "So you're the boss, eh?"

"Yes, I'm the boss," said he noncommittally.

"Heinzman holds some notes due against our people in ten days," said Orde. "I came in to see about their renewal."

Lambert struck a bell, and to the bookkeeper who answered he said, "John, bring me those Newmark & Orde papers."

The clerk returned and handed to Lambert a long manila envelope. Lambert spread its contents on his knee.

"Note for $75,000 with interest at 10 per cent. Interest paid to Jan. 10. Mortgage deed on certain lands described herein."

At the Majestic

The Majestic has brought forth, under the management of Wallace Campbell, very high class vaudeville. Among them was the sensational novelty act of Prevette & Murrell last week. This clever act caused great comment and was extremely artistic. Ila & Company are at the Majestic all this week. Ila, herself is a very clever girl mentalist. Although but sixteen years of age she is startling everyone. The Musical Harringtons are people of excellent talent and the fourteen year old girl shows unlimited ability and ease in her work with her father. Harry Keller, in his Messenger Boy act, is a hit and receives many encores. He also recently executes some new steps in wooden-shoe dancing. Fox & Lawrance appear the first of the week in a very clever and unique singing, talking and dancing act. Good motion pictures are assured each night.

The average cost of hauling a ton of freight a mile by railroad is 7.8 mills, while the cost of moving it the same distance by wagon is 23 cents. In the difference between these figures lie the chief argument and motive for better roads. The question is a vital one that all who haul produce to market should be interested in.

FEEDING THE CALF.

Care Should Be Taken When Giving It Skimmilk and Milk.

It is well to leave the calf by itself for at least twelve hours and, in case the calf has run with its mother for several days, possibly twenty-four hours. Attempts to feed the calf earlier than this usually do the calf no good and may injure the feeder's temper. If the calf's muzzle is held in the milk and its mouth pried open once so that it tastes the milk it will drink without the feeder being obliged to place his hand in the milk and allow the calf to suck his finger.

The calf is unable to handle hay or grain until it is a week or ten days old. During this period it is not wise to try to feed skimmilk. At first the whole milk should be fed three times a day—four pounds in the morning, two pounds at noon and four pounds at night—at blood temperature. In about a week or ten days the calf can be fed twice daily. During this time the allowance of whole milk can be gradually increased to about twelve pounds. The amount depends somewhat on its ability to handle increased quantities.

The stomachs of the young calf is very delicate, and all changes should be made gradually. When about two weeks old the calf, if a strong, vigorous one, can be gradually changed to skimmilk. During the first day decrease the amount of the whole milk one pound and add one pound of skimmilk, and so on each day until the change is complete. Previous to this the calf should have a little grain (corn or Kafir cornmeal or a mixture of both placed in its mouth immediately after drinking its milk. In this way it gets a taste of the grain and will soon go to the feed boxes and eat with a relish.

After the change to skimmilk is completed the amount may be gradually increased as fast as the calf is able to consume it without scouring. Care must be taken not to increase too rapidly. The calf is a greedy animal and will appear to crave every other drink. Its milk does it no good, and it cannot be taught that it will stop the scours. Overfeeding at this time is the cause of most of the trouble with young calves.

Watering the Colt.

In watering the colt, as in watering the horse, the water should be taken slowly. Do not allow the colt to drink its fill when it is very warm. Let it have a little at a time, and often. Do not allow the colt to drink ice water. Let the chill be taken off the water before it is given to the colt.

Taking Care of Foals.

The advantages of the spring foal are that this is a natural breeding season, the foals are usually stronger, they can spend a greater proportion of their early life outdoors and will be less trouble than the fall colts. In any case, colts should not be allowed to run with the mares when at work. In the fall they may be left in box stalls. If spring colts they should be left in the yard or paddock, preferably a grass plot, and allowed to be with the mares only when the latter are brought in for feeding during the day. This will be no hardship to the colt, there will be less risk of its being injured, and more work will be got out of the mare, because she will not fret and the colt will not be in the way on the fields.

Good Ration For Hogs.

A slop composed of soaked or boiled Kaffir corn mixed soft enough to pour easily makes the best and most economical grain ration for growing hogs obtainable. It is especially valuable for pigs on pasture, as it not only keeps them in good health but makes them grow rapidly, and together grain is necessary to all fattening hogs

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

The W. C. T. U. meeting held with Mrs. N. A. Shores on Friday last, was one of much interest, calling out a large attendance of about seventy five persons. A specially interesting feature was the prize essays written by pupils of the fifth and sixth grades. What were selected as the three best, were read by the writers, Harold Usher receiving the first prize, Harry Noble second prize and Perry Mason third prize. Mrs. Armstrong one of the judges, in her presentation speech said it was rather a difficult thing, to decide which was the best essay among so many very good ones. Several were considered worthy of special mention besides these winning the prizes, which consisted of a book for each of the three. The essays were all on the same topic; Alcohol and Tobacco. The program was given by the children, recitations by little girls and a song "Little Sunbeams", by ten children, was fine. An instrumental trio, piano and two violins, good. A song by four boys, "Onward Christian Soldiers" with piano and violin accompaniment.

A good number of the teachers were present and were invited to make some remarks. Among those responding were Supt. DeVoe, Miss Hines and Miss Reed. The thought given preeminence by the teachers was that for parents should visit the schools more. Six from the room represented the mothers as members of the union.

The exhibit of pies in well remembered white candy which had been provided for the occasion, and Mrs. Shores had also added a "treat" for the older ones, which was quite enjoyed by every one. She said it had given pleasure preparing it and certain it was those for whom it was provided had much to do, the tender sandwiches, pickles and cake-bars. It was evident that the entertainment that day don't do things by halves.

SKIMMILK VALUABLE

Skimmilk is by far the most important byproduct from the dairy and the best adapted to varied and profitable uses. A prominent dairyman says that skimmilk as a human food is unappreciated by most farmers, but it has been tested under various conditions by food experts and has proved a useful portion of an everyday diet for many people. The use of skimmilk ought to be encouraged.

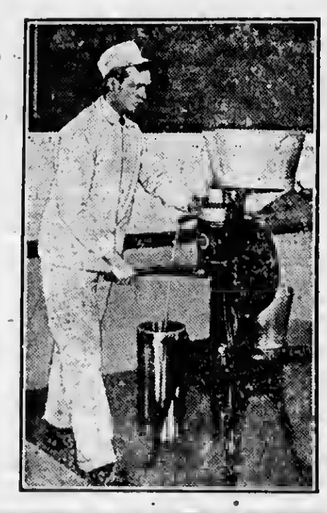
Every dairy should be equipped with a good separator, and farmers would find city markets for a large amonat of this valuable byproduct. Skimmilk has all the protein and half of the full value of the whole milk and is in most localities the most economical source of animal protein. The food elements in skimmilk are equal in physiological value to those of meats and are far less expensive.

As an article to substitute for water in the preparation of various dishes as well as for others that are made mainly of milk there is no waste, but a decided gain in food value. In making bread skimmilk will add to the weight and nutritive value of the loaf. Used in place of water, sufficient flour may be saved to pay for the milk and yet produce a loaf of equal weight and of more actual food value.

Milk bread is richer in fatty matter and superior in flesh forming elements, which is scientifically explained as being due to the casein of milk being incorporated with the fibrin of the flour. The sale of skimmilk to bakers and confectioners should be encouraged and is capable of being largely increased. Used in this manner, it may be made to net the consumer a dollar a hundred pounds, or more than a large per cent of the farmers and dairymen realize for their whole milk.

As a food for domestic animals skimmilk occupies the most conspicuous position of any foodstuff, especially as a feed for young and growing animals. It gives the best returns when fed to very young animals, constituting the larger part of their rations. It is next best for animals making rapid growth, but which need other feed than milk, mainly of a carbonaceous nature. Except for very young animals skimmilk gives the best returns when used in combination with other foods, generally grains. No class of live stock will give larger returns for skimmilk than poultry of various kinds.

If a premium were offered for the most rapid gains in pig feeding my opinion would be that some man skilled in feeding skimmilk with other foods would carry off the prize. Skimmilk is rich in bone building and blood making constituents, and when we consider its use for these purposes and also remember its easy digestibility and that by adding a variety it makes other food articles more palatable and assists in their digestion we must hold skimmilk as occupying a high place in the list of foodstuffs available on farms.



WORKING A HAND SEPARATOR.

Authorities seem to differ as to the merits of sweet and sour milk as a feed for swine. Calves are next in favor as profitable consumers of skimmilk, and some feeders think that they can feed their skimmilk to calves and derive more profit from it than by feeding it to swine, but this depends to a large extent upon the good qualities of the animals being fed.

In feeding skimmilk to calves a cent's worth of oilmeal will take the place of a pound of butter fat that has been removed from the milk. Besides, when the milk is fed warm it is better for the calves than milk that is cold and sour.

A young animal that is fed on skimmilk, with or mill feed or grain, may be made to weigh almost as much as one of similar breeding, but fed on whole milk, with the same kind of grain, at one year of age. In feeding skimmilk to calves overfeeding is dangerous and must be avoided. The digestive organs of calves are more easily deranged than those of the pig, and care must be exercised in their feeding. Some calves will take more skimmilk than others, and it is well to study the capacity of each calf and fit the amount of milk to suit each animal.

Some dairymen feed skimmilk to their cows mixed with grain and find it is of more or less value. It has also been fed to lambs, horses and colts with success.

CATS ON THE FARM.

More Apt to Kill Chickens and Birds Than Rats.

Many the innocent hawk, skunk, owl and weasel has been shot for the deeds of that sleek highwayman, the house cat. It is safe to say that this marauder, which enjoys all the comforts and protection of a home, destroys in the aggregate more wild birds and young poultry than all the native natural enemies combined. A cat has been known to kill a whole brood of chickens in a day, a feat unequaled by any predaceous animal, with the possible exception of the mink. Others in the course of a season have practically destroyed whole coveys of quail or grouse or nests full of young songsters. A well known naturalist estimates that in the New England states alone 1,500,000 birds are destroyed annually by cats.

The offender is not so often the well fed household pet as it is the abandoned and neglected outcast. In 1905 the Society For the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in New York city killed monthly an average of 6,000 sick, injured or homeless cats—a total for the year of over 70,000. A considerable proportion of these were pets abandoned by people who had gone to the country for the summer.

Moreover, summer visitors to the mountains or seashore sometimes take with them their cats, which, on their return home, are too often left behind to swell the local overflow and make serious inroads on the birds of the region. It is safe to assume that in the rest of the state outside of New York city as many cats follow a nomadic life as in the city, and if we assume that each cat kills one bird a week we have a grand total of over 3,500,000 birds destroyed annually. In the milder parts of our country, as in the chaparral region of California, where bird life is abundant, cats often revert to a semiwild state and never revisit their old homes except for plunder. Sportsmen and bird lovers should be ever watchful and whenever possible remove marauding cats from the coverts.

The principal reasons given for keeping cats are their attractiveness as house pets, their usefulness as companions for children and their alleged value as rat and mouse killers. It is impossible at present to obtain correct figures on the subject, but it is safe to say that few persons during a normal lifetime run across more than half a dozen cats that habitually attack rats. Occasionally a hunter cat is found which seems to delight in catching rats, gophers or ground squirrels. It is a common experience to find premises that are well supplied with cats overrun with rats and mice. At a certain ranch in the west a member of the agricultural department in Washington trapped eight mice in his bed, although there were eight cats on the ranch.

Facts About the Potato.

An authority tells us that the potato has a large and unique relationship. Tobacco, tomatoes, eggplant and peppers belong to the family. Probably that is why the potato bug is so often destructive to these crops. It is asked, "How can a potato grow other potato vines from the eyes since it is not a root, fruit or seed?" That is answered by way of illustration: A stem of almost any plant will produce another plant from the place where the leaves come out on it. If one will break off a piece of rosebush and plant it in a favorable place it will produce another rosebush, just as a potato will produce another vine.

In a wild state the potato vine is very hardy and will grow to a considerable height. It is said that the Indians did not cultivate the potato except for its leaves, which became known as their tobacco; hence the leaves and stalks of tobacco are large, but there are no signs of potatoes at the roots. So much for cultivation.

A WELL SHAPED SEED POTATO.

On account of the starch they contain, potatoes are valuable as food. The potato tuber consists mainly of a mass of cells filled with starch and encircled by a thin, corky rind. As stated, the chief value of the potato as an article of diet consists in the starch it contains and, to a less extent, in the potash and other salts. The quantity of nitrogen in its composition is small.

The cow that is making from two to three pounds of butter each day should not be turned out in a yard in the cold to exercise, else her butter yield will drop.

Neighborhood Notes

Auditor General Fuller is sending out to supervisors all over the state a circular letter in which is clearly set forth their duties as assessing officers. Particular attention is called to the many erroneous descriptions which are found in tax rolls, resulting in the charging back taxes and a consequent increased expense to the taxpayers. It is stated that much of the trouble arises in the older counties rather in the northern section of the state. Not only are the defects of tax rolls called to the attention of supervisors, but there is included a copy of the new law exempting the property of Civil war veterans, when it does not exceed $1,200 in value from taxation.

With the law is sent the construction placed on the act by the attorney general. This is the first time that the auditor's department has attempted this kind of assistance to supervisors and much good is expected to result.

A New Back for an Old One—How it Can be Done in Charlevoix.

The backaches at times with a dull, indescribable feeling, making you weary and restless; piercing pains shoot across the region of the kidneys, and again the loins are so lame to stoop is agony. No use to rub or apply a plaster to the back in this condition. You cannot reach the cause. Exchange the bad back for a new and stronger one. Charlevoix residents would do well to profit by the following example.

Mrs. C. E. Clapp, 137 Front St., Traverse City, Mich., says: "I can strongly recommend Doan's Kidney Pills, having used them with the best of results. Last spring I had a severe attack of kidney trouble and I was made miserable by dull, nagging backaches. My kidneys pained me and there were other symptoms of kidney trouble in evidence. Doan's Kidney Pills did me a world of good, relieving my aches and pains and strengthening my kidneys, in fact, making a general improvement. Other members of my family have taken this remedy and it has had the same good effect in each case."

BAD ROADS COSTLY.

Responsible For Hunger and Illiteracy In the United States.

GREAT HANDICAP TO FARMERS

They Suffer Heavy Losses Getting Their Products to Market Over Ill Kept Roads—Land Values Advance With Improved Roadways.

Two hundred and fifty million dollars a year are wasted on bad roads in the United States. Added to loss on haul, the storage and extra food rates make the total expense $1,000,000,000 a year. This means a tax of $12.50 on every man, woman and child in the country. Corners in the grain markets are frequently the direct result of bad roads. In four bad road states 375,000 people out of 7,000,000 cannot read or write. In four good road states out of 6,000,000 population there are 20,000 illiterates. Do good roads concern you? If you are one of the 30,000,000 people who live on farms in the United States it is a fairly safe guess that you know something about bad roads, even if you do not know and have never chanced to cross the 7 per cent of improved roads of the total 2,000,000 miles of highway in the United States.

America's country roads are so notoriously bad that it costs more to haul a ton of wheat from farm to market than to ship that ton from New York to Liverpool. America's country roads are so bad that it costs the American farmer 23 cents to haul a ton when it costs the English or the Belgian or the French or the German farmer only from 7 to 9 cents for the same haul. You, Mr. Town Man, and you, Mr. Farmer, pay for the unnecessary waste of those bad roads, the town man by extra cost of what he eats, the farmer by lessened profits on what he sells. The same reason explains why the town man pays $1.25 in spring for potatoes which cost from 50 to 75 cents in the autumn.

The interstate commerce report shows that the railroads yearly haul 265,000,000 tons of farm produce and that the average haul from farm to market for the whole country is nine and a fraction miles. Put the cost of hauling at a round $2 a ton for the nine miles and you have the cost of hauling farm produce at a round half billion dollars a year. Half that cost is waste, solely owing to bad roads.

The charge to haul wheat from New York to Liverpool, 3,100 miles, is 3.5 cents per bushel. The charge to haul a bushel of wheat from farm to market, 9.4 miles, is 5.11 cents. The storage on wheat at water fronts is 9 cents a bushel a year.

The results of bad roads are yearly tolls of $12.50 against every person who eats farm produce. That yearly waste would build 200,000 miles of A1 macadam roads every year, basing the cost at the very highest average of $5,000 a mile.

The beauty of the relentless scheme of things is when we mend our ways—in this case, mend our roads—nature not only wipes out the deficit, but she puts a plus to the account where there used to be a minus. Supposing of the 2,000,000 miles of roads in the United States all were improved instead of only 7 per cent, what would be the result to farmer and consumer? First of all, the big deficit of waste on haul, on storage, on cornered prices, wiped out! The minus goes off the national slate and the plus comes on.

The good road moves the remotest farm right next to the market. A farm twenty miles from the market on an all the year round good road is nearer market than a farm seven miles away on a bad road. Truck farmers in New Jersey and Long Island can haul their produce to market, thirty miles, cheaper than they can ship by railroad, and that produce nets, according to well known averages, as follows:

Fruit, $80 per acre; flowers, $2,000 per acre; corn, $8 per acre; wheat, $7 per acre; oats, $7 per acre; vegetables, $12 per acre.

Out in the Dakotas and Minnesota and Manitoba farmers haul their product thirty and forty miles, but they can haul it only when the roads are dry in the early fall, and at that season the price is lowest. The farmer along the good road can command the best price by hauling only when the price is best, and he can also raise the produce that gives biggest net returns. If you would learn why a whole family can live, and live well, off an acre in Holland and Belgium and France when a family often fails to live well off 160 acres in America.

With good roads Dakota farmers who under present conditions drive hub deep in gumbo mud during spring could market their crops when prices ruled the highest. Instead of selling their wheat at 70 and 80 cents in the fall they could sell it at $1 during the winter and in the spring. An additional price of even 25 cents a bushel would mean $15,000,000 more in the pockets of the Minnesota farmers, a similar amount to the farmers of the Dakotas and to the wheat farmers of the Pacific coast.

New York farmers do not raise vegetables in quantities because until recently roads did not permit them to market such a perishable product in quantities. This holds good in New England. The same condition exists in the cow country and the grain country. Potatoes and onions your Dakota farmer can market in quantities. Therefore he raises them, but because bad roads cut him off from the market half the year he does not raise the more perishable vegetables. Vegetables he buys from California at fancy prices, another tax for bad roads. In fact, owing to bad roads, there have been seasons when New Yorkers were paying $1 a bushel for their potatoes and western farmers were glad to sell them at 15 cents for pig feed and starch.

With access to market and best ruling prices, net returns increase and farm lands jump in value. It is an actual fact wherever good roads have gone land has increased in value from $2 to $9 an acre. In Jackson county, Ala., a bond issue of $250,000 built 125 miles of macadam road. The selling price of land was from $6 to $15 before the road was built. On the completion land values went up from $15 to $25.

The effect of good roads on school attendance needs no proof. In the five states having the best roads the average attendance is 77 per cent of enrollment. In the five states having the fewest good roads the attendance averages only 59 per cent.

With these figures on schools it is not surprising to find that ignorance and bad roads go together. In the four bad roads states, with a total population of 7,000,000, are 375,000 men and women, white and native born, who can neither read nor write. In four good roads states, with a population of 6,000,000, are only 20,000 illiterates.

The movement for good roads is so recent that it need not be retailed here. When colonists first came to America the roads followed buffalo trails and Indian wilderness paths. As farms became fenced roads ran along between boundaries without regard to the shortest distance or grade, and these were kept in order (or disorder) by statute labor—farmers turning out for a day once a year for a road picnic, filling in holes that ought to have been filled in months previously, tinkering and trifling away time with no special director. The results were what might have been expected. Men do not employ blacksmiths as doctors, and why should farmers be supposed to possess the technical knowledge of an engineer? During various wars two or three good roads were hacked through the wilderness across country, from New York up to Boston along the old post road, from the

THE SAME ROAD IMPROVED.

Cumberland mountains west to St. Louis, from Virginia up through Pennsylvania to Pittsburg and when emigration began to roll westward from St. Louis to Oregon. With these exceptions the highways of the United States were a system of pig track trails.

Then came the great railroad building era down to 1880, when public roads were forgotten in the expectation that railroads would supplant them, but as population grew the necessity for roads to link farm with market became daily more insistent.—Agnes C. Laut in Collier's.

Good Substitute For Macadam.

One example of the road bureau's work will show its usefulness. Roads for the state of sticky gumbo soil have been almost a hopeless problem. There is a whole belt of such states along the south, and there is another belt along the Missouri where wheels sink hub deep and horses flounder to death in a mire more treacherous than quicksand. The road bureau discovered from many practical tests that by burning gumbo soil a roadbed compact as macadam could be obtained at half the cost of macadam or at practically only the cost of labor and of fuel to do the burning. There is no longer any excuse for lethargy in road building through the gumbo states.

South to Build Highways.

Eight hundred miles of improved roads are to be undertaken by the Southern Appalachian Good Roads association. Of these 300 miles are to be in North Carolina. Poor roads are said to cost that state $10,000,000 a year. An enormous number of tourists go to the southern Appalachian region, but because of the poorness of the highways in general they see but a small portion of it. The great system of roadways now proposed is planned to make that wonderful region one of the most attractive in all the world.

This digging corn out of the snow in March is a belated and uncongenial labor, but any fellow who is engaged in it has the consolation of knowing that he has a lot of company.

"I want to renew the note for another year," Orde explained.

"Can't do it," replied Lambert. "Mr. Heinzman gave me especial instructions in regard to this matter just before his daughter was taken sick."

"But I'll give him 12 per cent for another year."

"He said not to renew even if you offered higher interest."

"What does he intend about this mortgage?"

"To foreclose."

"Where's your telephone?" Orde asked.

He tried in vain to get Heinzman at his house. The bell had been removed. Orde left the office at a loss how to proceed next.

"There's the year of redemption on that mortgage," he comforted himself. "We may be able to do something in that time. I don't know just what," he added whimsically, with a laugh at himself, the became grave. "Poor Joe," he said. "This is pretty tough on him. I'll have to make it up to him somehow. I can let him in on that California deal when the titles are straightened out."

Chapter 35

ORDE did not return to the office. He felt unwilling to face Newmark until he had a little more thoroughly digested the situation. He spent the rest of the afternoon about the place playing with Bobby. Three or four times he called up Carroll by telephone. After dinner they sat on the porch until Bobby's bedtime. Orde put his small son to bed and sat talking with the youngster as long as his conscience would permit. Then he retired to the library.

Suddenly Orde leaned forward, his senses at the keenest attention. After a moment he arose and quietly walked toward the open window. Just as he reached the casement and looked out a man looked in. The two stared at each other not two feet apart.

"Good Lord, Heinzman!" cried Orde. "What are you doing here?" he demanded.

"Duke me somewheres," he whispered hoarsely. "I haf broke quarantine, and dey vill he after me."

"What do you mean by coming here and exposing my house to infection?"

Heinzman began to blubber and cried aloud in greatest agony:

"I haf somedings to say to you." He grasped Orde by the arm. "Dey are dere mit shotguns to kill me if I broke quarantine. And I haf left my daughter, my daughter Mina, all alone to come and tell you. And now you don't listen."

"Come with me," said Orde briefly.

He led the way around the house to the tool shed and lit a lantern.

Heinzman sat down on a nail keg.

Orde looked at him curiously. He was half dressed, without a collar, his thin hair unkempt. His eyes burned bright as though from some internal fire.

"What is it?" asked Orde.

"Ach, Orde," cried the German, "I am tortured mit hollenqualle—what you call?—hell's fire. You, whose wife comes in and saves my Mina when the others runs away—you, my best friends! It is schrecklich! She vas the noblest, the best! She might take the disease; she might die. It vas noble." He shuddered. "My Mina left to die all alone!"

Orde rose to his feet.

How to Patch Wall Paper.

It is not easy to put a new patch on wall paper so that it hardly shows, but if you have an untidy place that needs repapering, try the following way: Cut a piece of paper rather larger than you require and if the paper on the wall is faded lay the patch in a sunny place for a day or two. Then brush it over with paste, lay it over the torn place and tear a strip off the patch at each edge, pulling it away from the outside so as to leave a thin edge of the colored part on top. When smoothly pasted down the joint will scarcely show. If the paper is torn before the paste is applied the thin edge gets too soaked and the paste is apt to ooze out and leave a dirty mark all round the patch.

How to Freshen Up Old Linen.

When table linen becomes worn and shows an open mesh it may be made more presentable if the pieces are ironed while wet. Some recommend using a little weak starch, but good linen has a certain firm texture which, when ironed as above mentioned, restores much of its original beauty and firm texture. While the pieces must be exceedingly damp, every article should be ironed until perfectly dry. Use a No. 9 iron for the purpose. It is large, retains the heat and presses quickly.

Resignation of George Todd as master was accepted by the grange.

The Ladies' Auxiliary will meet with the president, Mrs. Alma Nowland Wednesday, April 20.

Discussion on the question "Is it Worth While to Spray for Fruit," brought out the fact that several members sprayed from one to five times with varying results. One brother sprayed five times when the breaking down of the machine caused a delay rendering the work less effective in results than would have been the case had all spraying been done at proper time.

Election of master announced for next meeting.

VALUE OF FERTILIZER SHOWN

Millet Crop More Than Doubled by Properly Enriching the Soil.

The picture herewith represents the value of fertilizer on sandy soil. A strip of land in New York had celery on it at one side in 1908 with an application of about 300 pounds per acre of a 2-8-10 fertilizer; the other side had no fertilizer. The land was plowed and fitted exactly alike and German millet sown about June 15, 1909. The showing is remarkable, as the season was the driest and also the coolest for years, with only five inches of rainfall after July 1, which is about half of normal. The picture shows the growth of one square foot from each section, that fertilized in 1908 producing almost sixteen and one-half tons of green forage to the acre, while the other made only 6.8 tons. There are several points to be thought of here—first, that fertilizers of a good grade pay well the first year, and then some pay for the second year.

VALUE OF FERTILIZER PROVED.

If this is so with millet, would it not be so with grain seeded with grass and clover? That millet is a profitable crop both for soiling and cured is apparent when seven and one-half tons cured fodder can be secured per acre. As millet contains only about 2 per cent of protein, it should be fed in connection with alfalfa or clover hay. If these cannot be obtained the ration should be balanced with such feeds as oilmeal, cottonseed meal or the better grades of gluten feed.

"I have used millet for some years with dairy cows and young stock," says the farmer who made this fertilizing experiment, "and think very highly of it. It is said to be injurious to horses through the effect it has on the kidneys. With the hay crop as light as it has been for two years, as the dry season has been very hard on new seeding, it will surely pay our farmers to give more attention to the millets. Any one of the different kinds can be sown after all other spring crops are in and can be harvested and out of the way before fall work begins."

PRESERVING FERNS IN WINTER

They Should Be Placed Where They Get Diffused Light.

Although ferns are greatly admired for indoor decorations, the plants are in general singularly unfortunate in the treatment they receive at the hands of their owners. It being well understood that most varieties thrive better when not exposed to strong sunshine, they are usually relegated to any shady and cold position that may be otherwise unoccupied in the house. This method of dealing with the plants invariably ends in disappointment. Although it is true that ferns do not like the direct rays of the sun, still they need their, yet a certain amount of light to keep them in their dwarf growth, and instead of standing them in corners and other unfavorable places it is far better to give them the full benefit of a window—a northern aspect will do—or, at any rate, they should be placed where they get ample diffused light.

Another frequent cause of failure in ferns is the semi-starvation to which they are subjected. The idea is very prevalent that they do not require manure, and in consequence any poor soil which comes to hand is used for potting them up. Certainly a soil heavily manured is not suitable for them, and fresh manure should on no account be used, but a reasonable allowance of leaf mold is, as a rule, highly beneficial.

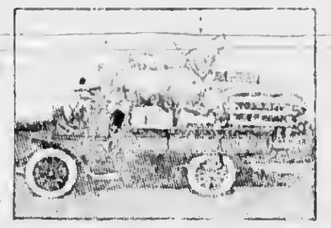
To preserve the delicate greenness of the fronds liquid manure may be given when the plants are in growth and the pots fairly full of roots. A good fertilizer, such as nitrate of soda, may be dissolved in the proportion of half an ounce to the gallon and the ferns watered therewith every ten or twelve days. This is especially good where the plants are old or partly exhausted. Soot water is also very useful as a stimulant. It should be perfectly clear and is best applied alternately with an artificial fertilizer. Liquid manure of animal origin should be used very sparingly or not at all.

AUTO TRUCKS FOR FARM.

Handy Horseless Vehicle Gradually Coming Into Agricultural Use.

One of the latest developments is the automobile truck for heavy hauling on the farm. The accompanying illustration shows one of these big gasoline driven vehicles doing heavy duty on a Virginia farm where until a few years ago the patient ox team drew the big loads. That the auto truck is penetrating the byways of the south is a significant sign of the times. For some years the horseless dray has been at work on many of the great western farms. Now it is becoming known in other communities.

The auto truck where the roads are fairly good is of inestimable service in hauling produce to town and in conveying machinery or building material from one part of the farm to another. Some farmers who have acquired this convenient vehicle help to pay for it by hiring its services to their neighbors upon demand.



AUTO TRUCK FOR FARM HAULING.

Of course the cost of a farm truck is too high at present for the small farmer to find it a paying proposition, but each year the price is decreasing, while it is said the serviceability of the trucks increases.

CURIOUS FARM FACTS.

Tulips will bloom better in the house if they are left until after New Year's to make roots.

A sensation in potato growing has been created in the neighborhood of Ridgely, Md., or at Richardson, a suburb, by the discovery that potatoes grown in a barrel yield enormously.

A white duck owned by C. W. Whitzler of Bridgeport, Conn., is normal in all respects save that it has no breastbone and over its breast feathers have never grown. The skin at this point is thin and almost transparent, and underneath this shallow protection one can see plainly the fowl's heart action.

Making bulbs blossom in the house in winter is one of the easiest processes in the world and adaptable even to city apartments, which is saying the last word about house plants. Hyacinths will bloom within a month in a Tye glass or a bowl of pebbles. You can buy the whole thing ready to fill with water and set on your mantelpiece for 30 cents.

On account of the st

tain potatoes are valuable as food. The potato tuber consists mainly of a mass of cells filled with starch and encircled by a thin, corky rind. The chief value of the potato as an article of diet consists in the starch it contains and to a less extent in the potash and other salts. The quantity of nitrogen in its composition is small.

There was never a farm touched by an interurban trolley line but that its value was greatly increased. Farm lands on interurban lines have advanced to as high as $200 per acre. The trolley converts a country home into a suburban home. Thousands of people move into the country with their families, where they live the year round, while their work is in the city.

If the young men who are brought up on the farms do not want to stay there it is up to them, but there are 200,000 more farms in the country now than there were ten years ago, and there are 6,000,000 of them now, with 30,000,000 people making a fine livelihood thereby. We cannot find it in our hearts to pity the "poor farmer." He is getting along all right, and if his son is wise he will stay by him.

The Baldwin apple first grew as a chance seedling on the farm of a John Hall in eastern Massachusetts and was later brought into prominence by a Colonel Baldwin. These facts are stated on a handsome monument which was a few years ago erected on the spot where this first seedling tree grew, and the parents of Baldwins which have been grown since the birth of the first tree in about 1740 are direct descendants of it.

Age of Apple Trees.

A good forty-year-old apple tree, if well grown and cared for, is a desirable tree for a town lot or the village garden, but is not to be recommended for orchard planting. It is too expensive, as the grower must have a big price for it to pay him for use of land and labor to grow, dig and pack such a tree. It is too large to handle properly and plant in the orchard, and the shock is too great for such a large tree to be removed after growing four years in a crowded nursery row. The chances are all against the tree being of desirable shape, and there is but little chance for the planter to get it into the desired shape of the modern orchard tree. The very best tree to plant in the orchard is a good one year tree. Such a tree should be from three to five feet high, according to variety, some varieties making much more growth than others in the same soil. The roots of this one year tree are ready to take right hold of the soil and commence to grow. The top of this one year tree is easily formed to any desired height and shape that suit the owner and is to be preferred to any other size or age of tree set side by side, it will bear a crop of fruit before the older and larger tree.

Treatment of Sick Fowls.

In the majority of cases the sick fowl should be killed, according to an authority. Generally it does not pay to doctor sick fowls, and often the sick fowl that recovers is not the one that amounts to anything afterward. This is particularly the case with fowls sick with the roup. This disease seems to permeate every fiber of the birds, and if they recover at all they are of little value for a long time. It is doubtful if they ever fully recover their old vigor. If one owns a high priced bird it may prove to be profitable to cure it for the sake of the eggs that it may produce, which eggs may be used for hatching other high priced birds. But a fowl that has been sick and has been cured should not be sold to an unsuspecting customer. The fowls that are to be doctored should be given good food and good surroundings rather than anything else. Their native vigor will help them to recover when medicine would be a detriment. Sunshine is an invigorator and may well be considered a great help in the doctoring of fowls.

SPECIAL MEETING HELD SATURDAY

Of Charlevoix County Fruit Growers' Association.

PROF. TAFT GAVE A FINE ADDRESS

Problem of Marketing Was Fully Discussed.

Next Meeting Will be Held in Charlevoix the First Tuesday in June—Thinning and Cultivating Topic.

About forty farmers and fruit growers attended a special meeting of the association held in East Jordan on Saturday.

Prof. Taft of Lansing gave a very helpful address on the subject, "Raising Good Fruit."

He reviewed at some length the somewhat general opinion that the fruit business might be overdone. Said that statistics showed that the acreage of apple orchards had almost donbled in the last few years yet in spite of this fact the demand for really good fruit was steadily increasing. He emphasized the fact that we are raising altogether too much poor fruit. He says he knows from experience that Michigan can raise as good fruit as any state in the union yet the fact remains that Michigan apples are not sought in the markets and this is due largely to the fact that packers have been in the habit of facing barrels with good fruit and filling the centers with culls.

There was some general discussion by the farmers as to the best means of preventing this practice which is surely killing the market for Michigan apples and several suggestions were made such as packing in smaller packages, labeling, etc., but we think that Mr. Taft gave the best solution of the problem. He said, and it is surely true, that so long as poor apples were raised they would be packed and would hurt the market and that as soon as the growers began to raise nothing but good apples the packers would stop packing poor ones.

He said that Michigan can grow good apples for less money per bushel than it costs some of the western growers to get theirs to market and that because of the expense in getting to market the western grower was forced to produce an article that would command the very highest price when it reached the market. These facts surely ought to set our growers to thinking and with such facilities as are natural to Northern Michigan the growers here by giving the business the same care and study can certainly outdo our western neighbors.

Mr. Taft did not give much time to the subject of spraying as an exhaustive paper delivered by him before the State Horticultural society, appeared in the report of the society, a copy of which was given to each one present.

He says that he has found that the lime sulphur solution will take the place of the Bordeaux mixture and that he is using it this year and advises farmers to use it on account of the fact that it is easier to apply and costs no more. If Bordeaux mixture is used he warns farmers to be sure that it is fresh as it very soon becomes stale and practically useless if allowed to stand exposed to the air. He says that it will lose its value in a very few days therefore the farmer who buys it is very likely to spend his time and money in applying something that has lost its value by being exposed.

He gives this as his reason for using the lime sulphur instead of the Bordeaux.

He says that we have no trouble in managing any of the insects or diseases that are here. We have no such things to combat as the Aphis, a leaf louse or the twig blight, two of the most troublesome things the western grower has to combat and that if the western grower can overcome what we have and also these two worse ones there is no good excuse for a Michigan grower producing fruit of poor quality.

Mr. Taft says that by careful cultivating the young tree can be made to produce several years sooner than if allowed to grow at its own rate.

He urges growers to be careful about cropping orchards without returning some fertilization to the soil. Says that clover and alfalfa are splendid crops to use in a young orchard and that a clover or alfalfa mulch is a splendid thing as these crops contain a large amount of the plant foods that the young trees need. He also urged care in the matter of producing a late growth that would winter kill.

Barnyard manure will take the place of fertilizers but advises the use of commercial fertilizer if the manure is not at hand. He advises the use of about one pound per tree of some good orchard fertilizer, recipes for which can be secured from any horticultural report. He advises that the ingredients be bought and mixed at home. He gives as the results of the use of fertilizer a better wood growth, stronger buds, better tree trunks and helps trees to hold crops in case of wind storms.

The matter of trimming trees was given some attention. Mr. Taft favors the method of trimming for low heads. Says he will start the heads from two to three feet from the ground and would go even lower than that were it not for the fact that he feared the deep snow might injure the branches. He will trim well back when setting, leaving perhaps five branches at first and trim later to three or at most four of the best branches.

Space will not permit mention of all the good points made by Mr. Taft. Among other things he made mention of the fact that some Fennville growers had received from six to ten dollars per barrel for their apples because they had taken proper care of them and produced really good ones. This is another proof that the grower who will use his head in the work as well as his hands need not fear that he will have no market for his crop.

Many farmers really know a good deal more about raising fruit than they will put into practice. A number in this community are buying spray materials this spring and we are of the opinion that the amount of poor fruit packed will be less from year to year.

The next meeting of the association will be held in Charlevoix on the first Tuesday in June. Thinning and cultivating will be discussed at that meeting.

All members are urged to attend and to invite their neighbors to attend and become members.

BAD FIRE AT KALKASKA

Loss Will be Upwards of Fifty Thousand

Second Big Fire Village Has Had in Past two Years.

Kalkaska was visited Thursday by the most disastrous fire in its history, eight store buildings being destroyed, making a loss estimated at from $40,000 to $50,000.

The fire started about 3 o'clock in the rear of the wooden store owned by Met Hobbs of Traverse City and spread with such rapidity that all the efforts of the village fire department were powerless to check its progress. All the buildings that were consumed were old wooden structures, dry as timber, and easy victims to the flames.

The buildings destroyed are as follows:

The Manning house, the leading hotel, in which was located the barber shop of Dean Lewis.

The C. W. Sherwood building, occupied by Fred Hart as a barber shop, and Bob Oxby's pool hall.

The building owned by Met Hobbs was formerly occupied as a saloon, but was vacant down stairs, but occupied by a family as a residence upstairs.

The Chayt Sherwood building, occupied by the meat market of James Hrady, which was a total loss.

Building owned by John Morrison and formerly occupied as a saloon, but vacant at the time of the fire.

Building occupied by Charles Bacon as a lunch room.

Building owned by John Moran of Traverse City, and occupied by Will Moran as a soft drink parlor and pool room.

Building owned by Cornelius Cronin, which contained a barber shop owned by Bert Hammond.

The building owned by Cornelius Kryser was slightly damaged by the fire.

The part of the town that burned was that south of the Clark block, which is a brick structure, and the fire was unable to continue farther.

It was about two years ago that the north portion of the town was burned in a similar manner, but this portion has been rebuilt with modern buildings, thus doing away with any further danger from fire in this section.

The real origin of the fire is not exactly known, but is supposed to have started from a spark. Insurance in varing amounts was carried by the people who were burned out in this last big fire.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Celebrated by Mr. and Mrs. Amos Richardson April 10.

Amos Richardson and Emily Pickett were married fifty years ago, the tenth day of April at Chazy, New York. Monday evening about eighty-five people gathered at the townhall in Norwood in honor of the event.

Mr. and Mrs. Richardson came to Michigan about forty years ago settling in Norwood on a farm where they resided until about eight years ago, when they retired from farming and moved to the village, where they now live.

The family were present except their son, Charles, of Detroit. The evening was spent in a social way. After a short program which consisted of a song by Rev. Biery and Anthony Clark, entitled; "Never Grow Old," Mr. Biery made a few remarks and then Misses Hazel and Francis Richardson, granddaughters of Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, sang. Refreshments were served, the table being neatly decorated. Some very beautiful flowers were presented by Mrs. Frank Richardson and Mrs. Chase.

TESTING SEED CORN

Professor Taft Gives the Proper Method

Should Be Studied by Van Pelt Boy's Corn Clubs.

Now that VanPelt has started the ball rolling for a corn contest among the boys of Charlevoix county next year, the importance of this year's work among the contestants should be constantly kept to the front. Not only should careful attention be given this year to the preparation of the soil for next year's crop but extreme care should be exercised in the selection of seed and it's testing. To guide the boys in the proper method of testing we give the following by Prof. Taft, given at a meeting held at Honor last week:

"Prof. Taft explained about selecting the ears of corn and taking a few kernels from each. These ears should be placed in order and numbered, and the kernels planted in the testing box in the same numerical order that the ears are taken care of. In this manner it will be easy to find the ear of corn that puts forth the most energy in the testing box.

Now about the testing box: Prof. Taft told the boys and girls that this part of the work could be taken care of by them, and each could thus have some part in the work of the farm. Take a shallow box, or select a soap box or a dry goods box and saw off about three inches from the bottom. Use this bottom and three inches of sides for the testing box. Put in a good layer of sand well moistened and then drive tacks about an inch and a half apart on each side and to these pass strings back and forth, dividing the bottom of the box into little squares an inch and a half in size. The box and its squares can then be numbered and the corn from ear number one placed in square number one, the corn from ear number two placed in square number two, and so on. After the usual time has elapsed, the kernels may be examined and the ears furnishing the kernels that do not grow should be fed to the stock. The growing kernel ears should be selected for planting. A dry goods box or two soap boxes will furnish room enough for testing sufficent corn for the spring planting on the ordinary farm.

FRIDAY APRIL 29

Arbor Day Proclamation Issued by Governor

Plant a Tree Should be the Watchword of Every Citizen.

Governor Warner has issued the annual Arbor Day proclamation, fixing Friday, April 29, as the day on which the people of this state shall plant a tree or in some other way do something towards beautifying the state. The proclamation reads as follows:

"The season of planting and seed time has come, and in compliance with a custom that should have the force of law, I hereby designate Friday, April 29, 1910, as Arbor Day.

The increasing importance of this day and its observances is urged upon our citizens. "Plant a tree" should be the watchword of everyone fortunate enough to own a portion of Michigan's fertile soil. The homes and farms, the parks and the highways of our state should bear evidence in the years to come that their future beauty and utility were kept in mind by those in whom their stewardship has been placed.

We owe this to posterity, but we will not have to wait beyond our own time for the reward. A love for nature, for the shrubs, flowers and trees should be inculcated in the youth of our land and there should be a program arranged for every school for Arbor Day with this end in view. The planting of the trees and the sowing of the seed should be followed by exercises that will make the day distinctive in the lesson that it teaches.

Those in authority in our cities and villages may well call the attention of the people to the day and the confidence that first brought about observance. Better care of the parks and playgrounds, improved conditions surrounding the public places will be the result of organized efforts and no more valuable service can be rendered the people than impressing upon the fact that this day means much to them and theirs.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the state of Michigan, at Lansing this thirteenth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and ten.

FRED M. WARNER,
Governor.

By the Governor:
FRED C. MARTINDALE
Secretary of State.

HON. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND

Choice of COURIER for United States Senator

FOR NEXT GOVERNOR OF MICHIGAN

Hon. Chase S. Osborn Will Receive Our Support

Dodds for Representative in Congress Has Made Good and Has Been a Faithful Servant of His People.

The COURIER believes that during the primary campaign, just opening, that it should, in line with the policy which it has always followed, take its readers into its confidence and tell them what candidates it will support, when it has a choice, and why it supports them. We have not heretofore expressed any preference because we wished a full party enrollment that would not be influenced in any way, by personal friendship for any candidate or any other reason.

Now, however, that enrollment is over; we are ready to announce that our choice for United States senator is the Hon. Charles E. Townsend of Jackson. We are in favor of Mr. Townsend because he represents the progressive element in National affairs; Because his legislative record is that of a man who has always voted and worked for what he believed to be right irrespective of criticism either from friends or foes; Because he would represent the people of Michigan in the senate and not corporation interests and would place Michigan in line with the other progressive states of the union.

For Governor we shall support the Hon. Chase S. Osborn, because we believe he is what is needed in the governor's chair, a first class lighting business man; Because he stands for those principles in public life for which the people are contending and will bring to the office the benefit of his world wide experience in public affairs and the study he has made of them in his world wide travels.

For congressman we shall support the Hon. Francis H. Dodds because he has demonstrated during his first term that he is a worker and is always on the job in looking after the best interests of his constituents.

For the other state and district officers we are as yet undecided until the entries are in. For county officers we hope that it will not be necessary for us to oppose any candidate for a Republican nomination nor to advocate the claims of one over another, but, if our duty points that way we shall not hesitate to do so.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

Eleventh District Convention at Benzonia May 12 and 13

The officers of the Eleventh District Michigan Christian Endeavor union are very busy planning for the next annual convention that is to be held Benzonia, Thursday and Friday, May 12 and 13.

This will be the best series of meetings that has ever been held in the district.

The principal speaker for Thursday evening, will be the Hon. Chase S. Osborn, of the Soo, whose fame as a brilliant orator is indeed world wide. In his own particular business he has been called to every country in the world. This alone is worth attending the whole convention.

Keep On the Sunny Side, will be the theme throughout all the convention. The Sunny Side of church work, Sunday school work, missionary work, in the business world, in the social world. Christian Endeavor work, the Sunny Side of the home the personal life.

The notices of the convention, the report blanks to be returned, will be mailed in a few days. The program is almost ready for the printer. Great activity is manifested all over the district, for the "Best Yet" convention May 12 and 13 will be red letter days for Benzonia and the whole district.

The only beneficial spray mixture is the Rex Lime-sulphur. We have it all ready to dilute and apply.

Literary Notes

How about the school-houses in your town? What sort of a classroom is provided for your son or daughter to work in, five or six hours per day? Do you know whether fresh air is admitted or prohibited in that room? Do you know whether the room is properly cleaned or is it germ-laden with sweepings? And if you don't know, why don't you know?

Why do you watch your child's scholastic progress, as shown in weekly or monthly reports from the teacher, and neglect to ask what care is given to his body from 9:00 to 12:00 and from 1:30 to 3:30, five days each week?

If you heard that little Jimmy Brown, who sits at the desk next to your son, was carry diptheria germs from the bedside of his sick father into that class-room, you would be the first to appear before the city physician or board of heath to file a complaint. Well, Jimmy's father has a disease just as infections—tuberculosis—and Jimmy Brown is carrying into that close, unventilated class-room tuberculosis germs in his clothing.

Why don't you do something to prevent such dangerous contact for your boy?

Why don't you demand in your town notification and registration for the father and fumigation and segregation for the son? What right have you, as an intelligent father or mother, to let your child take such chances?

These are straight-from-the-shoulder questions which you, as a parent, should consider and answer. They contain the reason for physical examination of school-children. This does not work a hardship on the few, and it, does save the many. Better that the school board of your town be forced to spend a few dollars each month for a class of segregated tubercular children than that your children and a score of other healthy children should be infected with the White Plague. —From Woman's Home Companion for April.

Fashionable Hours In Russia.

The Russian woman of fashion rises late and does not appear before 2 or 3 o'clock. If it be sunny and not too cold she will drive for an hour, returning to find her salon lighted, and there she will receive visitors, whom she regales with tea. If going to the opera she dines early and returns about 10 o'clock, when she rests until it is time to appear at the ball at midnight, whence she does not return until 3 or 4 in the morning. Suppers at St. Petersburg are very fashionable and continue until nearly dawn.

SMALL FORTUNES IN TREES.

Hints to Farmers Who Are Prone to Cut Up Fine Logs For Fuel.

Today there are comparatively few pioneer farms which must be cleared out of the forest, but there are many which still possess enough timber for fuel cutting and for commercial uses on a limited scale. In the light of recent warnings as to the menace of a scarcity of timber in the future, farmers need not be admonished to avoid useless waste of trees. The average farmer does most of his tree cutting in the winter when he has time to do the work. But perhaps the average farmer has not considered the commercial value of his trees.

TREE CUTTING ON THE FARM.

The writer spent some time at a small hotel in a village in southeastern Missouri a few years ago and was delighted with the big open fireplace in the hotel office. Roaring fires were built therein, and it was good to sit in front or at the side and watch the flames suck upward. Only wood was burned—no coal—and that made the real delight of the open fire.

One day the writer saw the hotel man bring in several huge log cuts and dump them by the fireplace. The landlord put on a log now and then and achieved a fine fire. The burning logs threw off a faint, peculiar scent which seemed familiar—a memory of boyhood. Investigation discovered that the log cuts were of splendid, perfect walnut—one of the scarcest woods nowadays. Any big walnut tree is worth many dollars more for cabinet work than for fuel, as it would seem almost anybody should know by this time. That man burned up about $200 worth of walnut.

It is well always to bear in mind that the fine big tree you are cutting down and cutting up for fuel or fence rails possibly might bring you as much as a load of wheat or corn if you would haul it to the nearest market.

Homemade Feed Mixing Box.

"There's always plenty of work on the farm," as the hired man said when his city cousin asked him how he managed to pass his time in winter when the nonfarming season was on. The hired man spoke gospel truth, as every farmer knows. But there are ways of making the work easier, winter as well as summer. Some farmers do many things in a haphazard, slipshod way, just as their ancestors used to do them, and never take the trouble to think up more modern methods. By this neglect they cause themselves much extra work.

MIXING STOCK FEED.

A certain farmer in Indiana whose neighbors mix feed for the stock in the old laborious way, simply pouring water from a bucket into the mixture and stirring it, has contrived a very simple but handy arrangement for mixing feed. He found an old flat box which had been used years before for mixing mortar when the farmhouse was rebuilt. Rains of several seasons had washed out all vestiges of clinging lime. From the well in his back yard he ran a flume of two inch wooden pipe which had been used formerly for draining a marshy place. With his boy pumping at the well the farmer has a constant stream of water flowing into his mixing box while he stirs the feedstuffs. Into a sack near at hand goes the mixed and moistened feed, ready to serve, and this Indiana man says the cows surely do like it put up that way.

TO REMOVE STAINS ON AUTOS

How to Clean Light Colored Leather Upholstery In the Machines.

Those who have purchased automobiles upholstered in light colored leather because their wives or daughters liked the particular tint of the upholstery are often bothered by the apparent untidiness of the linings which is sure to result from exposure and use. To clean and remove stains from light colored leather, however, is not such a difficult matter, and the following mixture may be used with excellent results: Boil a pint of milk, allow it to cool and add one dram of hydrochloric acid and one dram of sulphuric acid.

After this has been well shaken a half dram of oil of lavender should be added and one pint of vinegar and the white of one egg beaten to a froth. The mixture should be kept in a tightly corked bottle. If this liquid is rubbed on the leather with a soft cloth the stains will be removed and the leather be much improved in appearance.

How to Exercise For Cold Feet.

Ankle exercises will improve the circulation of cold feet wonderfully. When sitting in a chair stretch the foot out, extending the toes to the extreme limit. Then rotate the foot up and down, sideways and around in a circle. Then stand, supporting yourself by a table or chair, and, with one foot slightly raised, make it hang lifeless—in other words, devitalize it. With a circular movement of the lower part of the limb swing the foot around many times. Exercise both feet in the same way. When you have stopped the exercise you will feel a peculiar tingling sensation in the feet. This is the blood rushing back to them. Almost at once you will feel a comfortable sense of warmth that will be different from any feeling of warmth obtained by the use of hot water bags.

Samuel Johnson was himself—and this is a quality rarely found in "plain" men: under no illusion as to his personal appearance. Dr. Burney tells us that on one occasion while Miss Burney was examining his portrait he peeped over her shoulder and, with a ludicrous half laugh, exclaimed: "Ah, ha, Sam Johnson! I see thee—and thou art ugly dog thou art!"—London

"That is all right," said he. "Now let me get you home."

"No!" cried Helnzmnn. "Listen to me! I haf your note for sefenty-five t'ousand dollars. No?"

Orde nodded.

"Dot money I never lent you. No! I'm not crazy. Sit still! I know my name is on dot note, but the money came from your partner, Newmark."

"What?" Orde asked in bewilderment.

"Den ven you could not pay the note I vas to foreclose and hand over dot northern peninsula land to Joseph Newmark, your partner."

"Impossible!" cried Orde.

"I vas to get a share. It vas a trick."

"Why do you come to tell me now?"

"Because for more than one year now I say to mineself: 'Carl Helzman, you vas one dirty scoundrel. You vas a thief. It iss all right to be smart, but to be a thief!'"

"It iss all right to be smart, but to be a thief!"

"Why didn't you pull out?" asked Orde.

"I couldn't!" cried Helzaman piteously. "He haf me cold. I paid Stanford $500 for his vote on the charter and Newmark he know dot. He can prove it. He tell me if I don't do what he say he put me in jail."

"Well, he can still put you in prison," said Orde.

"Vot I care?" cried Helazman, throwing up both his arms. "You and your wife are my friends. She save my Mina. Dn lieber Gott! If my daughter had died, vot good iss friends and money, vot good iss anything? I don't vant to live! And ven I sit dere by her always something ask me, 'Vy you do dot to peoples dot safe your Mina?'"

His excitement died.

"Have you that note?" asked Orde.

"It is at my office for the foreclosure. I vill not foreclose. He can send me to the penitentiary."

"Telephone Lambert in the morning to give it to me. No—here. Write an order in this notebook.

Helzman wrote the required order.

"I go," said he, suddenly weary.

Orde accompanied him down the street and succeeded in slipping him through the improvised quarantine.

Morning found Orde still seated in the library chair. His head was sunk forward on his chest; his hands were extended, listless, palms up, along the arms of the chair; his eyes were vacant and troubled.

When the full sun shone into the library he aroused himself to change his clothes. Then, carrying those he had just discarded, he slipped out of the house and down the street. He paused only long enough to telephone from the office telling Carroll he would be out of town all day. Then he set out at a long swinging gait over the hills, miles from the village and in the high beech woods. There he sat down, his back to a monster tree. All day long he gazed steadily on the shifting shadows and splotches of sunlight; on the patches of blue sky, the dazzling white clouds that sailed across them; on the waving, whispering frond that overarched him and the deep cool shadows beneath.

At evening Orde shook himself and arose.

He reached home a little before 6 o'clock. He found Taylor awaiting him.

"I have things pretty well in shape," the lawyer said.

"Then the trouble is over?" asked Orde.

"I wouldn't say that," replied Taylor, "but you can rest easy as to the title to your lands. The investigation had no real basis to it. There may have been some small individual cases of false entry, but nothing on which to ground a real attack."

"When can I borrow on it?"

"Not for a year or two, I should say. There's an awful lot of red tape to unwind."

"Oh," said Orde in some disappointment.

Taylor hesitated.

"I have something more to tell you—something that will be painful," said he.

Orde looked up quickly.

"Well, what is it?"

"The general messedness of all this investigation business had me puzzled until at last I made up my mind to do a little investigating on my own account. There was one man behind all this. He was"—

"Joe Newmark," said Orde quietly.

"How did you know that?"

"I just guessed."

"Well, it was Newmark. He tied up the land in this trumped up investigation so you could not borrow on it."

"How did he find out I owned any land?" asked Orde.

"That I couldn't tell you. Must have been a leak somewhere."

Orde did not wish to return to the office until he had worked his problem out, so to lend his absence the color of naturalness he drove back next morning to the rooms.

In the evening he went direct to Newmark's.

"Mr. Newmark is out, sir," said Mallock and started to close the door.

But Orde thrust his foot and knee in the opening.

"I'll come in and wait," said he quietly.

"Yes, sir; this way, sir," said Mallock, trying to indicate the dining room.

Orde caught the aroma of tobacco. He turned the knob of the door and entered the library.

There he found Newmark in evening dress, seated in a low easy chair beneath a lamp, smoking and reading a magazine. At Orde's appearance in the doorway he looked up calmly, his paper knife poised, keeping the place.

Orde entered the room and mechanically sat down.

"Newmark," Orde began abruptly, "I know all about this arrangement you made with Helnzman."

"I borrowed some money from Helnzman for the firm."

"Yes, and you supplied that money yourself."

Newmark's eyes narrowed.

"Well, what of it?"

"If you had the money to lend why didn't you lend it direct?"

"Because it looks better to mortgage to an outside holder."

"That was not the reason," went on Orde. "You agreed with Helnzman to divide when you succeeded in foreclosing me out of the timberlands given as security. Furthermore, you instructed Floyd to go out on the eve of that blow in spite of his warnings, and you contracted with McLeod for the new vessels, and you've tied us up right and left for the sole purpose of pinching us down where we couldn't meet those notes. That's the only reason you borrowed the seventy-five thousand on your own account—so we couldn't borrow it to save ourselves."

"It strikes me you are interesting, but inconclusive," said Newmark as Orde paused again.

"That sort of thing is somewhat of a facer," went on Orde without the slightest attention to the interjection. "It took me some days to work it out in all its details, but I believe I understand it all now. I don't quite understand how you discovered about my California timber. That 'investigation' was a very pretty move."

"How the devil did you get on to that?"

"How the devil did you get on to that?" cried Newmark, startled.

"Then you acknowledge it?"

"Why shouldn't I?" Newmark laughed. "Of course Helnzman blabbed."

Orde half sat on the arm of his chair.

"Now, I'll tell you what we will do in this matter," said he crisply.

"We'll follow," said Newmark, "the original program, as laid down by myself. I'm tired of dealing with blundering fools. Helnzman's mortgage will be foreclosed, and you will hand over as per the agreement your Boom company stock."

Orde stared at him in amazement.

"I must say you have good nerve," he said. "You don't seem to realize that you are pretty well tangled up. I don't know what they call it—criminal conspiracy or something of that sort, I suppose. So far from handing over to you the bulk of my property I can send you to the penitentiary."

"Nonsense," rejoined Newmark, leaning forward in his turn. "I know you too well, Jack Orde. You're a fool. Do you seriously mean to say that you dare try to prosecute me? Just as sure as you do, I'll put Helnzman in the pen too. I've got it on him, cold. He's a bribe giver—and somewhat a criminal conspirator himself."

Newmark leaned back with an amused little chuckle. "If the man hadn't come to you and given the whole show away you'd have lost every cent you owned. And for your benefit I'll tell you what you can easily substantiate. I forced him into this deal with me. I had this bribery case on him. What had the man to gain by telling you? Nothing at all. What had he to lose? Everything—his property, his social position, his daughter's esteem."

He paused a moment to puff at his cigar.

"I'm not much used to giving advice," he went on, "least of all when it is at all likely to be taken. But I'll offer you some. Throw Helnzman over. Let him go to the pen. He's been crooked and a fool."

"That's what you'd do?"

"Exactly that. You owe nothing to Helnzman, but something to what you would probably call repentance, but what is in reality a mawkish sentimentality of weakness. However, I know you, Jack Orde, from top to bottom, and I know you're fool enough not to do it. I'm so sure of it that I dare put it to you straight. You could never bring yourself to the point of destroying a man who had sacrificed himself for you."

Chapter 36

"YOU seem to have this game all figured out," said Orde with contempt.

"Well," said the other, "let's settle this thing. The fact remains that the firm owes a note to Helnzman which it cannot pay. You owe a note to the firm which you cannot pay. All this may be slightly irregular, but for private reasons you do not care to make public the irregularity. Am I right so far?"

"You might hear the other side," interrupted Orde. "In the first place," said he, producing a bundle of papers, "I have the note and the mortgages in my possession."

"Whence Helnzman will shortly rescue them as soon as I get to see him," countered Newmark.

"If you force Helnzman he'll land you," Orde pointed out.

"There is Canada for me. He travels with heavier baggage."

"You'd lose everything."

"Not quite," smiled Newmark. "And, as usual, you are forgetting the personal equation. Helnzman is—Helnzman. And I am I."

"Then I suppose this affidavit from Helnzman as to the details of all this is useless for the same reason?"

Newmark's thin lips parted.

"Correct," said he.

"But you're ready to compromise below the face of the note?"

Newmark hesitated.

"Yes," said he, "because I know you well enough to realize that there is a point where your loyalty to Helnzman would step aside in favor of your loyalty to your family."

"And you think you know where that point is?"

"It's the basis of my compromise."

Orde laughed.

"The worst of it is I believe you're right," said he at last. "You have the thing sized up, and there isn't a flaw in your reasoning. I always said that you were the brains of this concern. If it were not for one thing I'd compromise sure, and that one thing was beyond your power to foresee."

He paused. Newmark's eyes half closed again in a quick darting effort of his brain to run back over all the elements of the game he was playing.

"What is it?" asked Newmark at last.

"Helnzman died of smallpox at 4 o'clock this afternoon," said Orde.

Newmark's face went slowly gray. For a full minute he sat absolutely motionless.

"Where are you going?" asked Orde quietly.

"I'm going to get myself a drink in my bedroom," he snapped. "Any objections?"

"No. After you get your drink I want to talk to you."

Newmark snarled at him: "You needn't be afraid I'll run away. How'd I get out of town?"

Orde looked thoughtfully at Helzman's affidavit, which, duly disinfected had been handed him by Dr. McMillan as important. Then he arose to his feet and glided softly across the room to take a position close to the door through which Newmark had departed. Finally the door swung briskly inward. Like a panther Orde sprang forward. He pinioned Newmark's arms to his side, where he held them immovable with one of his own. The other hand he ran down Newmark's right arm to the pocket. There followed an instant of resistance. With a sharp cry of pain Newmark snatched his hand out and gazed amazedly at the half crushed fingers. Orde drew forth the revolver Newmark had grasped in the coat pocket. He spilled out the cartridges and tossed the empty weapon to Newmark.

"There's your plaything," said he. "So you wanted that affidavit, did you?"

He paused.

"I don't need to tell you that I've got you," said he finally, "nor what I think of you. I can send you over the road for the best part of your natural days; also I've got these notes and the mortgage."

"Quit it," growled Newmark. "Send me up and be d——d!"

"That's the question," went on Orde slowly. "You hurt me pretty bad, Joe. I thought of you as a friend. I had a hard time getting over that part of it. We've been together a good many

NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNERS.

In looking about the city I find that many of the alleys have been used the past winter as a dumping place for ashes and other refuse and rubbish. It is sometimes inconvenient during the winter to have this refuse hauled away, but the time is now here when all of this rubbish should be removed. The city has provided a dumping ground and all property owners are supposed to use the same, and not the alleys.

We all want to work together for a clean city, and every property owner is hereby requested to act at once—have any rubbish he has dumped in any alley removed immediately and in the future abstain from using public places for a private dumping ground. Prompt compliance with this request will prevent personal interviews with the city officials, whose duty it will be to see that the ordinance relative thereto is enforced.

COLOSSAL ARCTURUS

The Fourth Brightest Star In All the Heavens.

IN REALITY A MONSTER SUN.

It Is Thought to Be at Least a Hundred Times Larger Than Our Sun In Diameter and Is About Nine Hundred and Fifty Million Miles Distant.

Most of us are prone to think of our sun as being the largest body in the heavens, the grand high lord of all the little planets and the twinkling stars. Such is very far from being the case. Practically all of the fixed and twinkling stars are as large as, and some even larger than, our own sun. They appear small only because of their great distance, for they are just as truly suns with families of planets flying around them as is our central orb.

There is one of these stars in particular that has attracted the attention of astronomers, not only on account of its great size, but also its enormous distance from our solar system. This is the star Arcturus. To have some conception of the almost inconceivable distance that separates it from us the astronomical standard of measuring distance must be comprehended. Now, light does not come from a luminous body instantaneously to our eyes. It takes time to come, because it is a wave motion in a medium. The velocity of light as most recently determined is about 186,000 miles a second. Multiply this by the number of seconds in a year and we have a distance known in astronomy as a light year. Therefore when a star is, say, six trillion miles away we say it is one light year off, which means that the light from the star takes one year to reach us. It may be of some interest to know that there is no fixed star less than ten light years away, or sixty trillion miles. This is the one known as Alpha Centauri. Most of the stars are much farther even than that. Arcturus being the farthest one measured to date.

Arcturus is thought to be at least a hundred times larger than the sun in diameter. That would make it 10,000 times larger in surface, or the dimension that is ordinarily compared. By means of the photometer its brightness has been determined to be 6,200 times that of the sun. It is the fourth brightest star in all the heavens, Sirius, the dog star, being first in brightness. As regards the distance from us, it has been found to be a little over 160 light years, or 950 trillion miles. This distance, of course, cannot be conceived by mortal man. It is so stupendous and amazing. However, one can get a slight idea of it by means of an everyday analogy. Think of the fastest express train going at the rate of 100 miles an hour toward such a star and compute the time it would take. It is found to be in round numbers exactly 120,000,000 years! Now, as we know that it has taken its light so long to come to us and as there are a great many stars whose distance has never been measured exactly, but which have been computed to be approximately several million light years away, we have absolute proof of the great age of the world and the stellar universe.

The elements composing the sun Arcturus are, peculiarly enough, very nearly the same as our sun. As it is one of the most wonderful and astounding things that a scientist can tell what a star so far away is composed of, a small explanation of the modus operandi would not come amiss here. It is done by means of a small instrument known as the spectroscope, which consists of glass prisms so arranged as to split up the light falling on them into its constituent parts. Now, every substance has the power to cause a certain color or line in the spectroscope if it is in a luminous condition, so this instrument is simply poluted at the star whose composition is sought. And if any line is found that corresponds to a substance that we know about we assume that this substance is found in the star examined.

Another interesting thing is the method pursued in determining the great distance of the stars. This is done by determining their parallax or angle made at the star between two rays from the star striking at two different points in space. As the greatest distance that we can measure off in this way and still take the angle is the diameter of the earth's orbit, that distance is invariably used. It is almost 200,000,000 miles, but that, as is seen, is very small compared with the enormous distance of the star. Now, the angle thus measured from Arcturus is only two-hundredths of a second! When it is remembered that there are 60 seconds in a minute, 60 minutes in a degree and 360 degrees in a circle, it is at once seen what a small angle the parallax is and how careful the astronomer has to be in his observations. Indeed, for a long time, before modern delicately measuring instruments were invented, no star's distance could be found, for there was seemingly no angle formed, and thus the old scientists had to assume the star to be at infinity.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The repertoire, this season, consists of comedy dramas never before seen in your city and Mr. Marks' careful selection of the caste, to faithfully portray the different roles and also, the splendid vaudeville, introduced between the acts, makes the Tom Marks Company the most popular on the road today. There are no long waits between the acts, as the entertainment is one continuous performance, from the rise of the curtain on the first act until the fall of the curtain on the final act. On Monday night the company will present the pretty Irish comedy drama, "That Irish Boarder," with Tom Marks in the comedy title role. "A Texas Ranger" Company

The theater goers of Charlevoix have a treat in store when "A Texas Ranger" comes to the Charlevoix theater on Tuesday night, April 26. This is one of those quiet melodramas that burns little powder, still abounding in heart and interest and thrilling climaxes. It tells a beautiful love story of the plains with just enough comedy to relieve the intensity of the dramatic situations. The story is told in five acts and the company carry all of their own scenery and stage equipment for the entire production. The plot and scenes are laid along the Rio Grande river in the early nineties, a very interesting period in the history of Texas. Mr. Ernest Stout, the author, has added but very little fictitious embellishment to the already interesting facts. The costumes, which are historically correct, is a feature of the performance. Price 25, 35 and 50 cents. Tickets at Chapels.

ENGLISH SPARROW PEST.

Uncle Sam Tells How to Get Rid of the Multitudinous Gormand.

The department of agriculture has just issued a bulletin, by Ned Dearborn, assistant in the biological survey, which tells farmers how they may rid their premises of the English sparrow, which has been inspected and condemned as a nuisance, though some good points, notably that of destruction of obnoxious insects, are admitted in its favor.

Mr. Dearborn says the sparrow's natural diet consists of seeds, though it eats a great variety of other foods. The English sparrow seems to be the champion bird gormand and thief. It even steals houses made for the good birdies. It destroys small fruits, such as cherries, grapes, pears and peaches. It nips off tender garden vegetables as they appear above ground. "The evidence against the English sparrow is overwhelming," continues Mr Dearborn, who offers these suggestions, among others, for its extermination:

The most effective method of preventing the increase of sparrows in a locality is to destroy their nests at intervals of ten or twelve days throughout the breeding season. By a concerted and continued movement to destroy every nest after the eggs are laid English sparrows in any locality may be gradually reduced without resorting to shot or poison.

Preliminary to the following destructive measures sparrows should be baited until they are attached to the spot selected for their execution. Seeds, grain or waste from the table, if supplied regularly, will soon establish a feeding place. If a general campaign is to be undertaken enough such feeding places should be maintained to attract to them practically all the English sparrows in the neighborhood. This can easily be done in winter when food is scarce. After thus baiting the sparrows they may be trapped or shot.

Traps alone are inadequate to exterminate sparrows, but a reduction of numbers can be effected by using a shallow box not less than four feet square, open on one side and covered with woven wire on the other. One side of this trap rests on the ground, while the opposite side is supported by a stick eighteen inches long. Near the upper end of this stick is attached a long cord, and between the top of it and the edge of the trap is placed a chip. By setting the trap over bait and pulling the cord from a sheltered point of observation when a flock of sparrows is beneath it numbers of them may be caught. Instead of the box described above, by which the birds are taken alive, an old door or similar device may be employed as a deadfall.

Sparrows are accustomed to feed in close flocks, and when thus assembled a large number can be killed by a charge of No. 10 shot.

Many persons will be surprised to learn that the English sparrow is good to eat. Mr. Dearborn says the bird has been eaten for centuries in Europe. In America it is served often under the disguise of the reed bird. Farmers who shoot or trap large numbers of the birds will find them very palatable food.

WHEN PLANTS ARE FROZEN.

Hints on Restoring Window Garden Flowers to Health.

During the winter the amateur in gardening has much to contend with, and not the least of the evils is frost, especially where an endeavor is made to keep more or less tender plants through the cold, dull months in a poorly heated greenhouse or frame.

Fortunately science has come to our aid and taught us a few things concerning the effects of frost on tender plants, and with these principles fully grasped we are in a position to combat frost. Plants which are kept as dry as possible during a spell of frosty weather without being allowed to suffer from this cause will withstand successfully far more frost than the same kind of plants whose tissues are gorged with liquid, and science has also taught us that the greatest mischief is caused by rapid thawing.

To grasp the above facts it may be as well before proceeding further to just consider briefly what really happens when a plant gets frozen. It is now generally known that a plant, like the human body, is made up of tiny cells, each of which, of course, has its own walls. Under ordinary conditions and when a plant has abundance of moisture at its disposal these cells are turgid with liquid. Now, when liquid becomes frozen it is one of the laws of nature that expansion takes place, and in the case of that in the plant cells no exception to this law is made. This expansion, then, results in a rupture of the plant cell walls, which under ordinary conditions of thawing causes the plant to collapse.

It has been proved that when a plant is thawed very slowly the plant cells are able to absorb the moisture which has been forced by expansion through the cell walls, and the rupture is to a great extent made good.

Assuming that the plants have not been watered more often than is absolutely necessary and that one morning we visit the greenhouse or frames to find that frost has reached them, we know that if they are to be saved thawing must be done very slowly. First of all, we must take care that the heating apparatus, if any is used, does not get into working order again, and if there is any likelihood of a burst of sunshine shade the structure with thick mats or anything else that can be quickly secured. Then procure an abundant supply of ice cold water and syringe or otherwise drench the plants with this until frost is gradually removed from the tissues. This will probably mean very cold hands and chattering teeth, but it is either this or losing the plants. For several days subsequently the plants should be kept as cool as possible without allowing frost to reach them again.

PATENTS NEW HAY PRESS.

Makes Two Bales at Time and Averages Six Hundred Bales a Day.

Theodule Guidry, a resident of Church Point, La., who for many years has been interested in farming and improving the devices used by farmers, has received a patent on a new double baler hay press. This press is unique in its construction, having done away with the large springs ordinarily in use on such balers and decreased the draft to a minimum. Experiments with models have demonstrated a capacity of fifty or sixty bales an hour.

It is constructed with a baling chamber on both ends of the press and compresses the hay by a plunger working on a crank shaft past the feed box on each end. The crank shaft is connected to a beam to which one horse is hitched for power, and at each round of the horse a stroke is made on two different bales, one on each end. It is possible with this model to get a bale of any desired weight, the same being controlled by two springs attached to a movable side of the baler which regulates the compression of bales.

Mr. Guidry says he thinks the baler will best anything on the market for speed and simplicity, and he is now negotiating with manufacturing companies for its construction and sale.

Orchards Worth $1,000 Per Acre.

A feature at a recent fruit show was an exhibit of Nova Scotia apples and a printed statement showing the profits of fruit growing in that province, especially in the Cornwallis and Annapolis provinces. The average estimate of cultivating, fertilizing, spraying and pruning per acre was $25, and the cost of picking and packing the fruit is estimated at 50 cents per barrel. The yield reported from eight to ten orchards shows an average for the past five years of from 100 to 165 barrels of shipping apples per acre, sold at an average price varying from $1.90 to $2.50 per barrel during the five years. The gross returns per acre range from $190 to $304 and the net returns from $117 to $219. The average net returns for all the orchards for the five years were $174 per acre, a sum sufficient to pay 15.75 per cent on $1,000. Accordingly a valuation of $1,000 per acre for these orchards seems not excessive.

Quick Improvement of Sweet Corn.

As a result of several years' selection Nelson S. Stone of Massachusetts reported last season sweet corn which matured nearly a week earlier than other early kinds which he had tried, and the ears were almost double the size of other early varieties. The improvement was made by choosing the earliest ears and then using those grains that grew on the middle of the cob and then still further selecting the largest and best shaped grains.

Tennyson's Love For Birds.

Alfred Tennyson was all his life a great lover of the woods and fields. Trees, birds and flowers were his everyday companions, and he faithfully studied the habits of Dame Nature's English tomslings. The lark, the nightingale, the owl and the linnet were his favorite birds. He was also greatly interested in the sea birds, the peregrine falcons, the cormorants, seagulls, etc., and in the long legged sea birds, the visitors to marshes and pools. He thought the curlew, of which he has written in "Locksley Hall," a very noble bird and loved its wild call over the marshes. There are many references to birds native to England in his poems, and all of these show a thorough acquaintance with the individual characteristics of the different species.

At Farringford the poet's garden was the home of the wild birds of the hedgerows. The blackbird and robin and the smaller birds flocked there in great numbers, and it was considered far more important that they should feel welcome there than that the fruit should be permitted to ripen undisturbed or the garden be kept in proper order.

Domesticated birds also Tennyson numbered among his friends. Brilliant peacocks and more sober doves and pigeons, he loved them all.

years now, and as near as I can make out you've been straight as a string with me for eight of them. Then I suppose the chance came and before you knew it you were in over your neck."

"Oh, for God's sake, drop that preaching. It makes me sick!" broke out Newmark.

"I'm not preaching," said Orde, "and even if I were I've paid a good many thousands of dollars, it seems, to buy the right to say what I d—n please. And if you think I'm working up to a Christian forgiveness racket you're mistaken. I'm not. I don't forgive you."

"Well, turn me over to your sheriff and let's get through with this," said Newmark sullenly.

Orde rose.

"Look here, Newmark, that's just what I've been coming to, just what I've had such a hard time to get hold of. I'm not going to hand you over to any sheriff. I'm going to let you off. No," he continued, in response to Newmark's look of incredulous amazement, "it isn't from any fool notion of forgiveness. I told you I didn't forgive you. But I'm not going to burden my future life with you. That's just plain, ordinary selfishness. I suppose I really ought to jug you, but if I do I'll always carry with me the thought that I've taken it on myself to judge a man. And I don't believe any man is competent to judge another."

Newmark, who had listened to this rambling exposition with curiosity, broke into a laugh.

"You've convicted me," he said "I'm a most awful failure. I thought I knew you, but this passes all belief."

Orde brushed this speech aside as irrelevant.

"Our association, of course, comes to an end. There remain the terms of settlement. I could fire you out at this without a cent, and you'd have to git. But that wouldn't be fair. I don't give a hang for you, but it wouldn't be fair to me. Now, as for the northern peninsula timber, you have had seventy-five thousand out of that and have lent me the same amount. Call that quits. I will take up your note when it comes due and destroy the one given to Heinzman. For all your holdings in our common business I will give you my note without interest and without time for $100,000. That is not its face value nor anything like it, but you have caused me directly and indirectly considerable loss. I don't know how soon I can pay this note, but it will be paid."

"All right," agreed Newmark.

"Does that satisfy you?"

"I suppose it's got to."

"Very well. I have the papers here all made out. They need simply to be signed and witnessed. Timhull is the nearest notary. Come," said he.

In silence the two walked the block and a half to the notary's house. Finally the papers were executed. In the street Newmark paused significantly, but Orde did not take the hint.

"Are you coming with me?" asked Newmark.

"I am," replied Orde. "There is one thing more."

In silence once more they returned to the shadowy low library. Newmark threw himself into the armchair. He was once again the coldly calculating, cynical observer. Orde turned to face him.

"You have five days to leave town," he said crisply. "Don't ever show up here again. Let me have your address for the payment of this note."

He took two steps forward.

"You're a dirty, low lived skunk. If you think you're going to get off scot free you're mightily mistaken."

Newmark half arose.

"What do you mean?" he asked in some alarm.

"I mean that I'm going to give you about the worst licking you ever heard tell of," replied Orde, buttoning his coat.

* * * * * * *

Five minutes later Orde emerged from Newmark's house, softly rubbing the palm of one hand over the knuckles of the other.

He turned out of the side street. His own house lay before him. He stopped, then stole forward softly until he stood looking in through the doorway.

"What do you mean?" he asked.

Carroll sat leaning against the golden harp, her sliding head with the soft shadows bent until it almost touched the strings. Her hands were straying idly over accustomed chords and rich modulations, the plaintive half music of reverie.

Orde crept to her unheard. Gently he clasped her. She sank back against his breast with a happy little sigh.

"Kind of fun being married, isn't it, sweetheart?" he said

"Kind of," she replied, and raised her face to his.

The Way to Manage Cholera Herds.

Carcasses of hogs which have died from cholera should be immediately burned or buried deeply and covered with quicklime. Separate the sick from the well hogs and divide the well hogs into two or more groups and separate them as widely as practicable. As the germs of cholera gain access to the system only through the digestive tract, the line of prevention is well marked. All feed and drinking troughs should be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected. If the troughs are of metal boiling them over a blaze will be effective. Streams that do not rise on the home farm should be suspected as a possible carrier of infection, and for this reason water from wells should be given. Feed sparingly. Where hog cholera serum is used the hogs should remain in the infected yards.

HOW TO CLEAN LACE.

Method of Restoring Fine Handmade Fabrics to Original State.

Lace which has become soiled may be restored to its original state and rendered equal to new if proper care and attention are bestowed upon it. Very fine handmade laces should never be cleansed by washing in the ordinary way. If they are only slightly soiled they could be very easily cleaned by rubbing powdered chalk or calcined magnesia well into them. This method of cleaning is credited to the late Mme. Modjeska. The lace should be neatly spread out upon a soft white cloth or fine white paper and thoroughly covered with the chalk or magnesia; then this should be covered by another cloth or paper of a similar nature, and the whole should be laid away for a few days under a heavy weight. At the expiration of the allotted time the lace should be taken from its wrappings and should receive a gentle but thorough shaking.

Another method is to take a quart or less of cornmeal. Put it into a bowl or pan; then dip and squeeze and work the cornmeal into the mesh of the lace without straining any of the threads. After this treatment and a good shaking it will look as fresh and attractive as new.

Very fine lace which has become quite soiled may be cleaned by washing it carefully in benzine. The lace should be put into a bowl and covered with the best and purest benzine that can be procured and be allowed to soak for a short time, occasionally receiving a gentle shaking, but it should never be rubbed with the hands. If necessary, when the benzine is poured off it should be replaced by a fresh supply and the lace allowed to soak again for a time. After it has become perfectly clean it should be pinned while still quite wet on a flannel covered board to dry. It is important that this should be done with great care. Plenty of small pins should be used for the purpose. Each point must be fastened down securely with due regard to the pattern of the lace so as to keep it even and correct.

If the lace dries before the task has been quite completed it should be moistened again with a sponge wrung out of benzine and then be exposed to the sun, where the fresh air may play upon it in order to dispel the disagreeable odor arising from the use of benzine.

How to Root Oleanders.

The best way to root oleanders is to cut off a strong woody limb, cut a slot in the end and fill full of cotton. Put this in a bottle of water, wrap paper around it so the plant will not touch the bottle, put in a dark place and in one week the bottle will be full of little white roots. Take out and put into plenty of rich soil and it will go right on growing.

Worms in the Colts.

Colts sometimes die from worms without the owner knowing what ails them. After weaning they are very susceptible to this ailment, as are all horses, more or less. A good remedy is powdered tobacco in the feed twice a day. For a colt a good tablespoonful is a dose; for older horses, in proportion. Give two doses and after a few days repeat the dose. Natural leaf is best.

FIRST GAME OF THE SEASON

Charlevoix High School Will Play Petoskey Saturday

ANNUAL CHICKEN PIE SUPPER

At Bank Hall Immediately After the Game

Inter-County Meet Will be Held in Charlevoix.—Boys are Planning on Successful Spring Season.

Saturday, April 30, is to be a big day for the local high school and citizens of Charlevoix. At 3:15 the high school base ball team opens the season by crossing bats with their arch enemy, the Petoskey high school and immediately following the game the whole high school will give a chicken pie supper at the Bank hall.

The base ball team has been practicing faithfully for a month, and despite that they were defeated in the initial contest with Harbor Springs last Saturday, they promise to make Charlevoix people happy and Petoskey correspondingly sad over the results of the game. Under no circumstances will they cast a gloom over the big supper, for in order to enjoy a big feast, one must be happy and the team realize that they must contribute their share to this feature.

Incidentally it might be well to mention that the local boys are out after the championship of the north again this year. Last year Charlevoix base ball stock went soaring because of the magnificent way in which the boys won the championship of the north and prospects are indeed bright for a repetition of the feat this year.

Of last year's team, six are in school and enough good material has shown up to insure a winning team. The team has two good pitchers in J. Powers and W. Poole, a good catcher in J. Krulick, a well rounded infield in L. Powers, R. Bridge, L. Hamlin and H. Wallace. The out-field is strong with W. Mitchell, L. Cram, J. Gaskin, G. Papineau and either J. Powers or W. Poole.

For any one who attended the first chicken pie supper given last year, the mere mention of the second supper assures attendance. Last year the high school people only fed 350 and this year they are willing to let at least 500 in on the good things. As last year the classes will look after the four tables. A great deal of friendly rivalry is manifested on these occasions, each class trying to make their table the most attractive. Many pronounced the decorations of last year the best they had seen and from the enthusiasm displayed this year, it is safe to predict that the classes will do even better this year.

The high school people realize, however, that the people do not come to suppers to eat decorations and before saying any more we will give the menu below:

Chicken pie (lots of it)
Escalloped potatoes (all you can eat)

Baked Beans	Brown Bread
Sandwiches	Pickles
Salad
Cake	Doughnuts Coffee

Surely in quantity, enough to satisfy the hearty eater, and in variety enough to satisfy an epicure.

With the proceeds of the supper the high school people hope to make the spring athletic season a successful one. A schedule is being made out for the base ball team which includes the larger schools from Traverse City up. In addition to the expense incurred by the base ball team, the track team is arranging to have the Inter-County track meet at Charlevoix. Our track team last year covered themselves and Charlevoix with glory by getting more points than the other schools put together in the North Michigan meet held at Petoskey. Four of last year's point winners, Mayne, Durgan, Paddock and Nettleton are in the school and with these as a nucleus the school hopes to build up a winning team.

The Inter-County meet will include Petoskey, Boyne City, Harbor Springs, East Jordan and Charlevoix. The high school is planning on making this another big day for Charlevoix. Charlevoix is centrally located and each of the schools will bring a large delegation of supporters with them. This means from 300 to 500 strangers on the streets of Charlevoix. The local school provides the banners and ribbons for the winners of the events. It will be necessary to incur some expense in fixing up the grounds.

The Charlevoix high school association has not been in debt in two years and are endeavoring to run athletics on a business basis. The local school deserves your support and every loyal citizen should turn out to the game and supper.

LOTS OF MONEY IN THE TREASURY

Michigan Again Takes Her Place Among the Financially Thrifty States.

For a long time our state treasury has been pretty badly depleted because a certain legislature failed to make a sufficient appropriation but now, the state of Michigan is a pauper no longer. There are $1,131,016.40 in the treasury at present. This will last but a short time, however, for the monthly expenses of Michigan are between $500,000 and $600,000.

The Chicago & Northwestern railway paid its taxes April 14 and the company got a receipt for $215,185.56. It is the first of the big companies to pay its bill.

The Consolidated Rolling Stock Co., of Bridgeport, Conn., paid $421 in taxes under protest. The company declares that this is 50 per cent of the net earnings of the concern in Michigan during the past year.

There are now $987,000 of the state primary school money in the treasury. This money will be increased to about $4,000,000 by May 10, when $3,850,000 will be apportioned among schools caring for 767,000 children.

AN OLD RESIDENT

Was Philip Morse Who Died Sunday Morning.

Came to Charlevoix County in 1888—Leaves Two Children

Philip Morse, an old resident of this county died at his home in Hayes township early Sunday morning.

Mr. Morse was born in Climax township, Calhoun county, Michigan, January 19, 1817. When about two years of age his parents moved to Allegan county. He became crippled through sickness at the age of four which resulted in permanent lameness. When nineteen years of age a team, which he was driving, became unmanagable throwing him out of the rig and injuring his spine so he was compelled to go on crutches the remainder of his life.
